

deur, wealth, liberty, and honour of Britain in a great measure depends upon the resolutions she now takes with regard to America and the West-Indies, and I am not inclined at present to say any more on the subject, for prejudices arising from interested views can neither be silenced, nor will they own conviction; only thus much, that you and your West-Indian false brethren can have no handle to say that this is written with much partiality or animated with any sallies of passion or prejudice, but a plain narration of facts, and the clear natural consequences that follow from these facts.

I am, &c.

Guadaloupe,
December 12, 1760.

F I N I S.

