Last night's meeting of the city ter.) council developed into a curious mess. The session was called last evening insead of Monday, in order that a deputation might be sent to Ottawa to cooperate with representatives of Toronto in opposing the petition of the Bell Telephone Company, now before parliament. No. 1 committee's report recommended the appointment of a committee for this purpose, and the council approved it.

For nearly two mortal hours the council wrangled over the selection of this deputation. There were motions and amendments by the score, and every one was voted down excepting the last, and when that carried a protest was lodged by Ald. Carrothers against the whole business.

The mayor on taking the chair explained the reason for calling the meeting before Monday, but he had since learned that the deputation would not be heard until March 3. It was necessary, however, to name the members

Ald. Winnett moved that the mayor and Ald. McPhillips, Douglass, Stevely and Winnett be the deputation. Ald. Dreaney, in amendment, proposed the following names: Mayor Wilson, Ald. any more impressed by half a dozen aldermen than by two. It would cost over $200 to send half a dozen. Ald. Cooper, chairman of the sewerage committee, said when there was a deputation in the wind some men around the council wanted to go everywhere and take it all in. He didn't see why the board of health had a right to send a deputation and the council to pay for it

The city engineer reported on the condition of the east end hall, and recommended that a four-inch pillar be placed in the center to relieve the wall on the south side, where it rested. The foundation in the northeast corner was undermined by rats, which had been drawn there by corn, oats and other tood supplies. He would suggest that the use of the hall be abandoned for such purposes, and that the tenant's lease be canceled. Ald. Taylor moved that the engineer be instructed to attend to the weak All physicians know this part and have it secured at once. Ald. A large number of the members of the local Typographical Union were in the hall, in support of their petition that the union label be placed upon all the city printing, as a guarantee that it would be performed by men receiving union wages. Mr. J. L. Goodburne, president of the union, Mr. John McLean, also a member of the union, and Mr. Joseph T. Marks, of the Trades and Labor Council, which advocates the label, were chosen as spokesmen of the union. Messrs. A. Talbot and H. J. Jones spoke for the employers, who are opposed to the union label. The matter had been referred to the council by No. 1 committee. Mr. Goodburne, being called upon, said the object of the members of the union was to protect themselves and the offices in which they worked. The label was a guarantee that the work was performed by journeymen. It was especially used against child-labor. The introduction of machinery had thrown a considerable number of printers out of employment. It was the union's desire, therefore, to try to reduce the number of apprentices, which in most places was too many. The label was a pledge that the printing had been done by men getting fair wages, while it did not raise the cost of printing. Those who employed child-labor did not charge less than a union office, but were able to get larger profits. Mr. Goodburne read the agreement between employers and employes in reference to the label, showing the scale of wages, and the proportion of apprentices to be observed by the for-One office has already signed the label agreement, and two others are ability of its being signed within a few days. Mr. A. Talbot said that if the label was adopted the employers would have to enter into an agreement with the union. The city's printing was a small fraction of all the work, and why should the employers be forced to make such an agreement because of that fraction. There was a bylaw compelling all city printing to be done by union wages, which the speaker said he | fore April 1. write their motions. They seem to paid. There was only one office willing to sign the agreement, and if the others did not, there would be no tion in the city. The competition of outside offices, using cheap labor, was keenly felt by local employers.

negotiating for its use, with the prob-

of the aldermen before their election had pledged themselves to support the label. The aldermen in the past had never made a pledge to the Trades and Labor Council which they did not carry out, and he did not think they would fail now. He did not think they had promised to do a thing they did not understand. They must judge between the interests of 10 or 12 men and their families, and the interests of 80 men and their families. The agreement as to the union label was a fair one. It allowed a good many boys to the number of men. It called for wages of not less than $9 per week. Surely no alderman would oppose that. Supposing there were offices employing union men and paying good wages-was it fair that other offices should bring in boys and girls and crowd out the others? It was a matter that affected the business men, for the more money spent in wages, the better for them. In the city of Hamilton, with bigger printing establishments, they had the union label, and those who bitterly opposed it at first, and claimed that it would drive them out of business, were now its best supporters. Today there was only one establishment that had not the union label, and it was a small concern. The standard wage bylaw of the city did not cover this question, because they knew contracts had been awarded by the city to men who did not pay the union wages, or one-quarter of them. There were printers walking the streets, looking for work. He had nothing to say against women working at trades, but they should get the same wages as men. Wherever the label was, they could be sure the work was done by men at a fair rate of wages. It had been suggested that the union should do a little mission work among the employers. So they did, and two Mr. H. J. Jones said there was only one union label office in the city. Had the conditions been known, those aldermen who promised to vote for the label would not have done so. If a man came to him and asked for work, he thought he had no more right to ask him whether he belonged to a denomination. All employers should have an equal chance. Mr. John McLean said the union was not singling out any office for support; it wanted the label in every office. Mr. Jones had said he conducted his establishment under fair conditions; but there were other employers in the city who did not. Southam company, who had the city printing this year, did it with men from the surrounding towns and with boys. Three or four men were hired for a few weeks, but he had only one regular man apart from his foreman. The London Printing and Lithographing Company had nine boys and eight journeymen. He asked Mr. Jones if ne would tender for the city printing the label were approved. Mr. Jones said he would tender under fair conditions, but not under the union label Mr. McLean said that if Mr. Talbot had not violated the union scale, as he said, why did he oppose the label? When an honest employer, paying union wages, came in competition a man employing child labor, he had to ose his business or lower his wages. The Typographical Union had always been just and had always invited the employers to discuss the disputes. The union wished that several other employers were present so as to challenge them. The union was not going to let the matter drop. In reference to monopoly, the only monopoly that could be created would be by the balance of the employers themselves re-rusing to accept the agreement.

Mr. Talbot said he had tried the label and found that it was not a benefit to him, as he had to convince customers that his work was not dearer than another man's. He had noticed that the work of boys did not pay, and the more one had of them the more it cost one. He objected to five men from the typographical union im and his employes.

Mr. Talbot said he knew nothing of the conditions in Hamilton.

Ald. Winnett said he was not trying Ald. Taylor said there would be a meeting in the hall next week, and perhaps more later on. The matter the conditions in Hamilton.

Ald. Winnett said he was not trying to shirk the responsibility for signing the petition for the label. But if the request was granted it would be a Ald. Dreaney wanted the matter monopoly, as there was only one office sent to a committee with power.

Ald. Cooper said if people were foolish enough to go to the hall to be killed it was their own fault. Neither granted the request.

council had the power to bind the empleyers to make an agreement with their men. For that reason he favored sending it to the city solicitor. Ald. Gerry said it was a question whether the council should adopt the Ald. Taylor's motion to refer the label, and not whether the employers had to sign any agreement. That had

Ald. Belton said the label was used in Hamilton, and the same laws governed that city as London. The council could do as it liked. Ald. Wilkey had signed the petition for the label, but he said he was somewhat thick-headed, and wanted to see the agreement and think it over. Ald. Carrothers said he favored union wages, but did not want to put himself in an awkward position.

Ald. Hunt said he had been asked to sign the union's petition. He made inquiries, and received answers in accordance with the agreement read by Mr. Goodburne. He had not changed face on the matter, and thought should be settled tonight, although he did not wish to place the council in a predicament.

Ald. Nutkins said he had committed himself to the label, but he had not seen the agreement then, or he would not have signed it. He did not believe that the sixth clause could be carried out. He did not think it just to employers, as it might be a boycott. If the solicitor's opinion was favorable to the Trades and Labor Council, he was prepared to vote for it. Ald. O'Meara said he was sorry the question of legality was raised. was prepared to support the petition, providing the council had the legal right. He would do anything to forward the interests of labor, without doing an injustice to the employer. Ald. Greenlees said he had received the circular of the union, and had given a non-committal answer, as he wished to hear both sides. He would vote against the petition, as it barred out competition, and brought unjust pressure on the employer. He would like all men to get fair wages.

Ald. Jolly said he had not understood the circular. He would not vote to compel any manufacturer or merchant to sign an agreement of that kind. It was not a fair thing. The motion referring the matter to

MOURNED AS DEAD

An Embro Boy Who Turns Up in the Klondike.

For six years Mr. William Munro, Haliday street, Embro, says the Courier, has not heard from his son James, who then started with a number of others for the wilds of Alaska. Mr. Munro had long ceased to expect tidings of his beloved son James, whom he mourned as dead, but a short time ago a letter came from Dawson City, addressed to Mr. Munro in the wellknown handwriting of his long lost son. A letter from James under any circumstances would be a joyful message to his parents, but the contents of that one were doubly welcome, for it not only revealed their son in the life, but told them of his success in the land of gold. "I am coming home not later than September," he wrote, "and when I arrive you need work no more, for I have plenty for us all.' James has evidently struck it rich in the Klondike, and the whole community will rejoice with Mr. and Mrs. Munro at the good tidings received from their long lest son.
