I STOOD AMID THE GLITTERING THRONG

I STOOD AMID THE GLITTERING THRON
BY T. B. ABALEN.
I stood amid the glittering throng—
I heard a voice, its tones were sweet;
I turned to see from whence they came,
And gazed on all I longed to meet:
She was a fair and gentle cirl,
Her bright smile greeted me by chance;
I whispered low—I took her hand—
I led her forth to dance!

There was but little space to move, So closely all were drawn; Yet she was light of heart and step, And graceful as a fawn.

A virgin flower gemm'd her hair, Her beauty to enhance, She was the star of all who stood In that close cottage dance.

In that close cottage dance.

I've moved since then in princely halls,

I tread them even now—
I hold in mine the hand of one
With coronected brow,
And I may seem to court HER smile,
And seem to heed HER glance;
But my HERRY and THOUTHERS still wander home
To that sweet country dance,

Oft when I sleep, a melody
Comes rushing on my brain;
And the light music of that night
Is greeting me again.
I take her still small hand in mine,
Amid my blissful trance;
And once more—vision worth a world!—
I lead her forth to dance.

VARIETIES.

POPPING THE QUESTION.—The desperate struggles and floundering by which some endeavour to get out of their embarrassment are amusing enough. We remember to have been much delighted the first time we heard the history of the wooling of a noble lord, now no more, narrated. His lordship was a man of taleuts and enterprise, of stainless pedierce, and a fair rent-roll, but the veriest slave of bashfulness. Like all timid and quiet men, he was very susceptible and very constant, as long as he was in the habit of seeing the object of his affections daily. He chanced, at the beginning of an Edinburgh winter, to lose his heart to Miss—; and as their families were in habits of intimacy, he had frequent opportunities of meeting with her. He gazed and sighed incessorily—a very Dumbiedikes, but that he had a larger allowance of brain; he followed, everywhere; he felt jedious, uncomfortable, savage, if she looked even civilly at another; and yet, notwithstanding his stoutest resolutions—notwithstanding the encouragement alforded him by the hady, a woman of sense, who saw what his lordship would be at, esteemed his character, was susperior to giriish affectation, and made every advance consistent with womanly delicacy—the winter was fast fading into spring, and he had not yet got his mouth opened. Manuma at last lost all pathence; and one day, when his lordship was taking his usual lounge in the drawing-room, silent, or an occasional monosyllade, the good lady abruptly left the room, and locked the pair in alone. When his lordship, on essaving to take his leave, discovered the predictament in which he stood, a desperate fit of resolution scized him. Miss——sat bending most assidnovsly over her needle, a deep blush on her check. His lordship, on essaving to take his beave, discovered the predictament in which he stood, a desperate fit of resolution scized him. Mischer to the charge, but lossing heart by the way, passed in silence to the other end of the room. He returned to the charge, but lossing heart by the way, passed in sil

Personal. Appearance.—This is one of those things of accident, resting with nature. No man or woman can form their own persons, and none should be praised or blamed on this head. The disposition for looking well is ruining half the young people in the world—causing them to study their glasses and paint or patch, instead of pursuing that which is lasting and solid, the cultivation of the mind. It is always a mark of a weak mind, if not a bad heart, to hear a person pealse or blane another on the ground alone that they are handsome or homely. Actions should be the test, and a liberal course of conduct pursued to all. It matters little whether a man is tall or short—whether the blood stains the check, or runs in another channel. Fashion makes the difference as to beauty. The lifty is as sweet if not so gay as the rose, and it hears no thorn about it. As to the appearance, fashion should not be allowed to bear upon that which cannot be changed except by deception, and that indeed, in reality is not worth the trouble of being so, even if it could.

Ladies of Patmos.—There are hardly 300 men in Patmos, and at least twenty women to one man; they are naturally pretty, but disguise themselves with paint so as to be absolutely frightful; yet that is far from their intention, for ever since a certain merchant from Marseilles married one of them for lier beauty, they fancy there is not a stranger comes thither, but to make the like purchase. They looked upon us as very odd fellows, and seemed to be mightily surprised when they were told we only came to search for plants; they imagined on our arrival that we should carry into France at least a dozen wives.—I oyage into the Lecant.

LLUSTRIOUS SHOEMAKERS.—Gifford and Drew were both shoemakers; so was Holcroft, whose dramatic works have done him so much honor. Robert Bloomfield was a shoemaker when he wrote his "Parmer's Hoy." Dr. William Gray, Professor of Sanserit and Bengalee, in the College of Port William, Calentta, was in early life a shoemaker. So is Mr. John Strothers, the author of the "Poor Man's Sabbath," the "Peasant's Death," and other poems,—Roger Sherman of Connecticut, one of the abic signers of American Independence, was a shoemaker.—He worked at his trade till he was 21 years of age, at Newton, neer Boston, from whence he migrated to Newton, neer Boston, from whence he migrated to Newton, near Boston, from whence he migrated to Connecticut; and by assiduity in civil employments, arose gradually to be a Judge, a Legislator, and an seminent Statesman.

Hilling Corn.—The expediency and utility of hilling corn, has been much questioned among agriculturalists; or this subject an observing farmer has expressed his opinion to us decidedly against the practice; he says, "If any individual will take the trouble to examine the extent and various winnings of the roots, he will arrive at the same conclusion; at the season of hilling, the roots, which convey most of the nourisiment to the stalk, extend two or three feet in every direction; it is evident therefore, that deep plonghing or hooing must do much injury in cutting off the sources from which it receives its nourishment; corn which has high hills, is also more liable to be blown down. I have never practised making high hills, and yet Lyen ever failed, Ithink, of gathering as large crops as those who hill their cure after the old way." We are plad to find some experimental farmers around us; that is, men who are determined not to follow the precise steps of their grandfathers, when experience and observation teaches them better systems; we wish more of the spirit of investigation existed; we have no doubt better crops noight be had with far less labor, by the industrious yeomanny of our country, if improvements were adopted with less hesitation.—Narthampton Courier, the process of the place the great messes of society of new nosition with respect to each other—in a po-
