MAN AND NATURE.

Life in this world is a ceaseless struggle between man and nature. The And yet he has a chill! latter as the guide and teacher is harsh and even cruel at times, yet never continually so, while man, like a spoiled child endeavors unavailingly to prove his own supremacy. On his part the fight at times becomes one for existence but the conditions which he finds opposed to him are created for his own ultimate benefit. Thus, for instance, in India, China and certain other countries where the people are by Sure and where they trust only in a 'phone. "Sorry, but we have no public slight degree to their own efforts, nature finds it necessary to admonish them. Famines occur, millions of peo-'ple realize that they are without food. and desperate struggles for life follow. This is nature's way of telling man that he must take thought for the morrow, that too great a reliance on the unaided production of the soil may lead to disaster. The idle, the ignorant and the thoughtless are thus taught that their existence is to a large extent tlependent upon themselves. Famines do not occur in the more highly civilized countries where people have learn-plenty against years of want.

In these latter countries nature' duty is different; it is in preventing man from suffering from his own excessive but misdirected energy. Civilization depends on prosperity in those institutions which itself has created. Men have an inherent tendency to thwart their own efforts, and create conditions which if "Excuse me, I'm in the wrong place, natural forces were undisturbed would never exist. For instance the depresa Town Topics." sion which has prevailed during the past year in America and which is now beginning to make itself felt in Europe is a direct outcome of man's unwise policy. By too great zeal he has created confusion in the ordinary course of progress, has caused complications progress, has caused complications the fence and watch the tortoise whize which have disturbed prosperity, and by. in consequence he suffers through what we speak of as dull times. Here mother we speak of as dull times. Here mother nature comes to his relief. The present stringency can be overcome only by a bountiful harvest, by an increase in the wealth of those person who actually product and from whose efforts all prosperity must arise. By foolish expressions are considered as a constant of the law expressions and the plaintiff's attorney, "appears to be afraid of losing his case. Otherwise, why isn't he ready to go on?"

"I've got a good excuse," replied council for the defence.
"Nonsense! Ignorance of the law expressions are considered." prosperity must arise. By foolish ex-travagance we have made ourselves al-cuses no one." most bankrupt; yet the earth is now declaring a dividend which will pay all oills and set us up in business again.
The crops from the Atlantic to the Pactific, north and south, have never looked better. In our own district hay, the first of all, is about ready for cutting and the yield is abundant. In the west there has been absolutely nothing to injure the wheat, oats and barley. In the United States corn and cotton, which with wheat form the principal products, are the best in many years.

It is true that the harvest has not yet been gathered, but there need now be been gathered, but there need now be no fear of failure. Good crops are necessary, and will be provided; nature will according to custom, make up for These schemes arise chiefly from the success of Count Zeppelin's latest airship. Tempelin on his feet and he has actulief in the ingenious citizen, has put Zeppelin on his feet, and he has actually accomplished more in the last year than in all his previous career. He is foremost today among aeronauts and for practical purposes his machine, simple in its construction, is away ahead of those more complicated contrivances designed by Henry Farman, the Wright Brothers, or Santos Dumont. Half a dozen years are all and one or two friends did their best to withdraw the fist of the young offender, but in vain. It was a very valuable vase, and the father was loath to break it, but the existing state of affairs could not continue forever. At length, after a final attempt to draw forth the hand of the victim, the father gave up his efforts in despair, but tried a last suggestion.

"Open your hand!" he commanded the tearful young captive, "and then draw it forth."

BEAUTIFUL FIEND CONDENMED TO DEATH

A young woman of remarkable beauty named Grete Beier, the twenty-ty named Grete Beier, the twenty-two-year-old daughter of the former Burgomaster of Brand, in Saxony, was condemned to death at Frieburg on Tuesday for the cold blooded murder of her lover, Chief Engineer Pressier, at Chemnitz.

The trial is the last of a series in which the girl Beier has been the principal figure. Her mother is now serving two years' imprisonment for attempted subornation of perjury on Grete's behalf. Another lover, Merker, and Grete herself were recently sentenced for receiving stolen goods, and several women who gave the girl and Merker onportunities for rendezvous have been convicted. Yet againg Grete was on June 5 sentenced to five years' penal servitude—for theft, forgery, and incitement to murder.

Circumstances surrounding the murder for which she has now been sentenced are of the most dramatic character. Pressler, a man of property, and madly in love with Grete Beier, was engaged to be married to her. All she wanted him for, however, was his money, and to secure this—she laid an artful scheme.

She wrote, according to a confession artful scheme.

She wrote, according to a confession she has made, to Pressier informing him that she should visit him on May 14 at Chemnitz, and started for the latter place with a bottle of cyanide of potassium, and a revolver she had some time before stolen from Presslar's drawer. HONDURAN REVOLUTION ler's drawer.

The rest of the story she told to the court in the most callous manner as follows:—"At Chemnitz Pressler met me at the station. He had bought cakes, and we went straight to his room, where he asked me to make coffee while he fetched cream, which he knew I liked. Then we drank coffee terrather I could not put the poison in Britannia. ler's drawer. together. I could not put the poison in the coffee, as I drank that myself as well. Therefore, I had to leave it to chance.

"Pressler was, moreover, very attentive, and after the coffee he invited me to drink a glass of egg cognac. I refused, whereupon he said I might, at any rate, pour out a glass for him. I did so, and quickly let the poison drop into it. Then I stirred it several times with a spoon, which, in my excitement, I very nearly put to my lips. But I remembered in time.

"Meanwhile Pressler sat to one side on a lounge chair. I went up to him, and he was aggressive, and tried to draw me on to his lap. He was very passionate, and his face was so distorted that it filled me with disgust and horror. Not quite knowing what I did, I reached him the cognac, and said, "Here, drink."

"He took the glass, and emptied it at one draught. He had barely put it down before he fell over. I did not believe that Pressler was dead. I thought that he would come round again, and would then have dreadful pains. So I took a serviette, tied it round his head—why I do not know, for his eyes were shut—placed the revolver into his mouth, which was open, and pressed the trigger.

mouth, which was open, and pressed the trigger.

She had previously prepared three documents, one to fulfil the purpose of her crime, the others to divert suspicion from herself. The first of these was a forged will, in which Pressler was represented as making her his universal heiress. In order that she might better imitate his handwriting, she had copied out every one of his letters to her. She had then destroyed the originals, so that she might put forward the copies as confirming the authenticity of the forged will, which ran as follows:—

To be opened after my death.

As sole heiress of all my property I herewith name my flance, Grete Brier, daughter of the Burgomaster of Brand. I ask my relatives to refrain from demanding their legal portion of my estate. I do not regret what I have done. To live merrily and die happy is to cheat the devil. The statement of my first wife is correct. She has already received her legal share. I assumed this would never come to light. This testament is written in my own hand and therefore legal. I am in full possession of my mental faculties. Farewell and live on happily in this world which I have so richly enjoyed. My flances may do with my personal property whatever she pleases. Nobody shall dictate to her. My diamond pin she shall wear herself. She should receive about £750 in cash.

PEKIN, Jely 13.—In the spring of 1904 Sir Francis Younghusband, of the British Army, led a British column over the mountain passes of the Mimalayas and fought his way into the Holy City of Lhasa. In the eyes of all true Buddhists this was desecration and ever since then the Dalai Llama, the religious head of the Buddhist faith, and ruler of the Tibet has been a wanderer over Northern China. He would not stay in his city after the feet of infidels had trodden its sacred streets. Consequently accompanied by numerous retinue, he started on his wanderings through China and Mongolia, an expensive and unwelcome guest at the various cities where he elected to stop. Now the Llama is coming to Pekin, where as a matter of fact, he will be more welcome than he was in other cities. Political expedient will, however, make it necessary for the Chinese authorities to receive him with a show of welcome, but they will do their utmost to persuade him to return to Lhasa and if they can once get him to start for home, they will send along a numerous force of troops to see that he reaches there without stopping unduly on the way.

the Buddhists but to entertain such a host in, in the luxurious manner they expect is expensive and troublesome to the officials upon whom the Llama has descended and demanded hospitality in the name of his high office. Ever since the Dalai Llama has started on his travels the Chinese throng has tried to break up his caravan and send him back to Lhasa but without succeses. The Chinese Government desires to re-organize the arministration of Tibet, but it can do nothing without the Llama's co-operation. The throne is now resorting to blandishment to bring him to Pckin even if he were not wanted here, in the ultimate hope that they can persuade him to go back home. No Dali Llama has ever before left the region of Lhasa and with one exception, ro Grand Llama, of whom there are three, has ever visited Pekin. This exception was in 1779 and the visitor died of smallpox immediately after his arrival. The Dalai Llama is 32 years old
