

PRINCE GEORGE IN NEW ROLE

Erratic Son of Servian Monarch
Breaks Into Journalism—
Out With Hatchet for His Critics.

Vienna, Feb. 22.—Former Crown Prince George of Servia, whose erratic behavior has shocked European court circles and made him the laughing stock of the civilized world, has broken out of his period of comparative quietude. His new venture is in the field of journalism, the young prince having founded a newspaper, which he calls "The Reformer," and which he uses to propagate his reactionary ideas and uphold the doctrine of absolute monarchy, divine right, etc. The columns of this princely sheet are also devoted to the most infamous libels on the members of the cabinet, who threatened to resign unless his father, King Peter, banished him from the country.

About a year ago Prince George renounced his rights to the throne in favor of his younger brother, Prince Alexander. Although the Servian people were strongly opposed to him and the press openly denounced him, his resignation came voluntarily and was not doubt prompted by one of his erratic impulses. It was later rumored that King Peter desired to reinstate his macedonian son, and this was a signal for a fresh outbreak from the prince, who openly denounced the young prince as a good-for-nothing and worse. This worthy individual added a fresh fuel to the fire by the most radical utterances, which finally resulted in the cabinet demanding that he be banished. The young prince, who openly denounced the young prince as a good-for-nothing and worse. This worthy individual added a fresh fuel to the fire by the most radical utterances, which finally resulted in the cabinet demanding that he be banished.

Prince Only Laughed.
But the prince only laughed at this order and continued his revelries in his apartments, not 500 yards from the palace. In order to get back at the press and his enemies in the cabinet, he has now established a paper, and fills its columns with torrents of abuse. Prince George is now about twenty-five years of age, and his brief career, to say the least, has been picturesque. Many times he has been reported insane, and for brief periods he has been heard making noise. Then he would reappear as the central figure in some scandal or escapade, which would cause the European courts to take notice of him. He received his education in the page's school of a Russian court, a nest of vice and intrigue. But his temper and arrogant attitude did not make him very popular. On the occasion of his father to the throne of Servia, however, he immediately became the center of a group of fanatical courtiers, who joined him in his revellings and bore his abuse in exchange for royal favor.

His behavior has been so numerous to mention, but they become so frequent and so violent that he was known all over the kingdom as "His Royal Highness the Hoolligan."

Has Fiendish Nature.

His fiendish nature is fittingly illustrated in an episode which occurred a few years ago. The young prince found a live mouse in a trap in the palace. He took it outside and ordered the guard at the doorway to kill it. The guard refused, whereupon Prince George drew a revolver and threatened to blow the man's brains out if he didn't obey his commands. The poor fellow called for help, and fortunately his friends arrived just in time to save his life.

This young scapegrace picked a quarrel with his private tutor, Major Levesque, and ran that good natured individual through the body. This resulted in the major's removal to the hospital in the royal service. At another time he paid court to the daughter of a Servian general and in order to carry out his evil designs, he had one of his companions dress in a garb of a priest and perform a mock-marriage ceremony. Later on he deserted the girl.

Amusement With Cats.

One of his greatest amusements was to buy cats in the earth up to their necks and then tramp them to death. Another was to sit at the window in the palace and shoot at passers-by with an air rifle, and in many cases he inflicted painful wounds.

The inhabitants of Belgrade lived in terror of their lives for a long time, as the royal reprobate would drive his teams and automobiles through the streets at breakneck speed, regardless of the lives and limbs of pedestrians. While on one of these devilish trips a short time ago, his automobile was overturned and he was hurled through the guard glass into the gutter sustaining painful injuries.

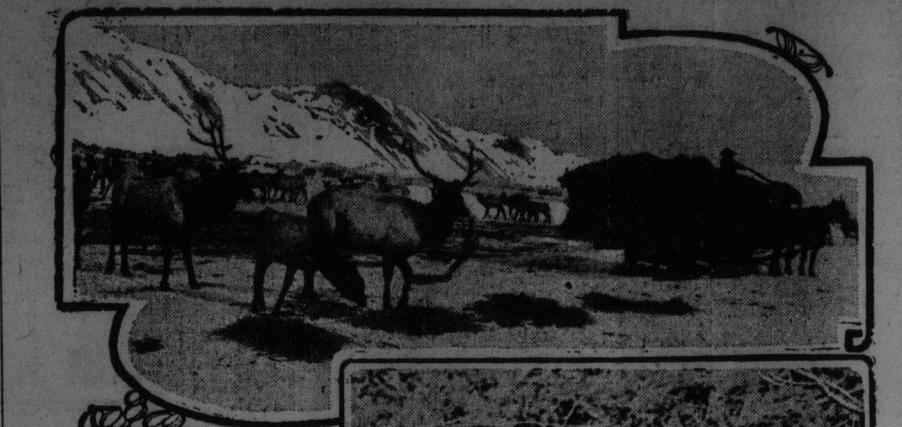

One Mysterious Death.

Shortly before he renounced his rights to the throne the young prince's valet died under mysterious circumstances, and it was hinted that the servant's death had been caused by a blow, which his master struck in a fit of anger.

It is believed that King Peter has a warm feeling in his heart for Prince George despite the young man's erratic behavior and his open defiance of his father's commands, and many are of the opinion that he will reinstate the young scapegrace. An action of this kind, however, would well might precipitate a revolution, as Crown Prince Alexander is a model youth and much beloved by the Servian people. Whatever the outcome of the present situation, however, it is certain that Prince George will be heard from again in event of King Peter's death.

They Are Raising Elks Now For Market Out In Wyoming

CARTER'S ELK FOLLOWING THE HAY WAGON.

To J. J. Carter of Jack- son's Hole Belongs the Most Unique Farm in World.

Cheyenne, Wyo., Feb. 22.—There are farms and farms—chicken farms, rabbit farms, alligator farms, ostrich farms, frog farms, oyster farms, lobster farms, snail farms, goat farms, skunk farms and pelican farms—but J. J. Carter of Jackson's Hole, Unta county, has a farm probably unique in the world.

There have been tall stories lately having to do with chicken farms, and the hefty profits to be derived therefrom. Carter lets 'em all talk much as they are of mind to.

But in the six years he's been putting along with his herd of pet elk—60 head in it now and the number's growing—he's cleaned up some $12,000 and had his health, his living and a good time besides.

Carter supplies many elk to city zoos. He has been paid as high as $500 for a single bull elk delivered to the railroad alive for shipment to some park. There is also good profit in slaughtering them. The meat sells at high figures. The skeletons and skins, ready for mounting in full figure, have a ready sale, while heads, teeth and horns can always be disposed of to a fraternal order, and to clubs and hotels for trophies.

The sharpest demand is for the younger animals. Yearling does fetch from $100 to $200, depending upon their condition, and fatness of their sex, sell for from $40 to $100.

Taking into consideration the fact that elk are no harder or more expensive to raise than cattle, any farmer can appreciate these figures. The herds are very prolific, usually producing calves to equal 85 per cent. of the number of adults each year.

The spotted fawns were shipped as soon as they are old enough to leave their mothers. They are easy to handle, and as a rule they thrive well in their new habitats and grow to be large, handsome animals.

Jackson's Hole is the last stand of the noble elk in the western United States. The Hole is a sizable valley, embowered all around with such a network of interlaced, difficult mountains that the depression might originally have been formed by a blow of a Titan's fist.

In the valley and on the slopes of the mountains leading down into it live, it is estimated, 35,000 wild elk. This is more than were in the valley a few years ago. They have been increasing rapidly benefited by rigid game laws.

Twenty years ago the mountains of Wyoming and Colorado swarmed with elk, antelope and deer. That was about the time Carter settled in Jackson's Hole. He used to ride from his ranch the few miles to the postoffice at Jackson and see thousands of elk at a meeting of the members of the congregation is called for tomorrow evening. Only those who are baptized can vote, and it is expected that the members will take sides on Mrs. Haggart's position.

Comment was made all over the city today on what seemed direct allusions to the trouble in nearly all that the pastor said in the pulpit. In the Scripture lesson he read: "Let all evil speaking and malice and bitterness be put away. Have no fellowship with the works of darkness."

Mrs. Haggart has been a member of the Baptist Church for forty years. She was a Catholic in her youth and for a time an attendant at the Episcopal Church. Her husband, Thomas Haggart, died ten years ago.

FISHERMEN THROWN DOWN BY OTTAWA

Federal Government Refuses to Extend Time to Smelt Fishermen Handicapped by Mild Weather.

Dalhousie, N. B., Feb. 22.—A stubbornly contested game of hockey was played recently between the Ramblers of Jacques River, Kent county, and the Dragons of Dalhousie, on the home ice here. The Ramblers won over the Dragons, scoring 2 to 1. The game was clean from start to finish, and some sharp work was done by both teams.

The federal government has refused to grant an extension of time to the smelt fishermen here. Owing to the mild weather in December and January, the fishermen could not get their nets set, and when it was possible to set them, the mild weather in January compelled them to go ashore, some losing their shanties. Up the river and down the bay, the fishermen have done a good business, although the catch was lighter than in previous years, yet the price has been high and brought up the amount of income. Dalhousie has suffered from the late formation of ice and the refusal to grant an extension.

Mrs. Donald McLean of Charlottetown is visiting her daughter, Mrs. J. D. Jones.

Miss Jennie Stewart, who has been spending the autumn and winter with her aunt, in Boston, returned to her home yesterday.

The many friends of Mr. A. H. Hilliard regret to hear that his health compels him to go south during the cold weather.

Miss Gertrude Harquail is confined to her home on account of an accident, received recently.

Miss Millie Stewart leaves shortly for Grandby, Ont., where she has accepted a position.

Hon. C. H. Lablanc is on the 16th inst. to take up his duties in the Legislative Assembly at Fredericton. Rev. J. H. Kirk was in Campbellton on the 18th, attending the funeral of Rev. Dr. Carr.

Miss Annabel Stewart is home for a short stay owing to ill health.

THOSE NERVES AND THEIR CURE

Suggestion as the Panacea for Ills of Irritability Set Forth by Famous Physician in Recent Book.

What strikes the layman as a very promising and reasonable method of treating nervousness and irritability is elaborated by George L. Walton, M.D., in "Those Nerves." The cure is, in a word, suggestion, the greatest therapeutic agent in the world. Unfortunately its conscious use has been left largely to fakery, the medical profession having taken the ground, until very recently at any rate, that it is undignified for the practitioner to "get results" by any other methods than those set forth in the old text books. In the past few years, however, some distinguished medical men have endorsed mental therapeutics. Dr. Schofield in particular, having written several books on the subject. The volume under discussion is an interesting addition to the bibliography of suggestion.

The Super-sensitive.

Dr. Walton speaks of the lady to whom the smell of tobacco is abhorrent, the man who suffers from a sudden noise as though it were a physical blow, and the person who cannot bear to see pictures askew. All are troubled with "nerves," but as nerves like the electric wires, are mere conductors, the one of sensation, the other of force, it would be more correct to say "that brain" than "those nerves." As we are not born with "susceptibility to definite sources of annoyance," Dr. Walton thinks that these cases of "nerves" or "brain" have their origin in association. That is to say, the woman who is nauseated by a distant smell of tobacco was probably first sickened by rank smoke and the unconscious memory of the incident, rather than the present odor, causes her discomfort. "Nerves" of this sort are signs of unsoundness. Super-sensitivity should not be boasted of, as though it were a desirable refinement. On the contrary, the victim should set about curing himself.

Cured By A Nurse.

Doctors cannot effect the cure. They can merely indicate the course to be pursued, but the patient must do the real healing himself. He must train himself to overcome all sorts of aversions, whether for things or for persons. Now and then a doctor, by a ruse, will trick a patient into a cure. For instance, Dr. Walton had a rich young woman consult him one day, her trouble being that she could not sit in a chair except in the attitude of a pose for a flight. Many previous consultants had told her that she could learn to relax by exerting her will efforts in vain. Dr. Walton told her sorrowfully that there was no hope for her; that she had not enough will power for anything. "She left the office with a stern expression, to return some months later completely cured. Just to show me that I was mistaken!" In another case the negative method of suggestion was successfully used in an obstinate case of nail biting. The doctor made a bet with the boy that he could stop the habit for a certain short period. At each visit he urged the patient to recommence, as he was only losing time by not trying to break the habit. The boy, however, resisted the temptation and was cured.

Don't Let The Engine Race.

The nervous victim, the worrier, must work out his own salvation in the great majority of cases. He must try to strengthen his nerves just as the consumptive tries to heal his lungs by seeking fresh air, the observing of certain laws as to food, exercise and sleep. He must not seek solitude. He must say that he hates company. That, however, is his disease. He cannot, of course, keep his mind empty of thoughts, but he has some control of his thoughts. He must not let them concern some person but himself.

"When the worrier lets the mental wheels go round without something coupling on something tangible, he is letting an engine run." The mind does far better when occupied with a real load than when just "racing." The man who finds it impossible to take any interest in anything but immediately concerning himself is a hopeless case. Doctors do not write books for him; nor do newspapers publish in his interests.

Conquering the Body.

The man who sets out to conquer his nerves should begin with the slight demonstrations, and work his way upward. His first aim must be to regain control of his body; then he can conquer his mind. He must learn to hold the body in absolute repose. The man who cannot sit still; who cannot talk without pacing up and down; who is continually clearing his throat, drumming with his fingers, or rubbing his chin, or some other feature, is carrying a heavy handicap. He is permitting energy to leak from himself every minute of the day. The effect is as though his body were continually losing blood. Don't fret. The man who can triumph over these little habits can regain his command over his nerves in time. Perfect physical and mental control, however, comes only after years of persistent effort. It is one of the rarest things in the world, and is well worth the struggle necessary to attain it.

As the season is favorable, "Tracade" will soon become a busy place, as it is the market place for all the surrounding country, and being situated on the Gulf of St. Lawrence with a little dredging, will be an open port to the largest crafts.

The prospect of the province is now very promising, the valuable timber lands, the manufacturing of timber and minerals springing up from all sides, iron and coal found in large quantities and further operations promising still more together with our valuable fishing industries and sporting inducements, we will have the best province in the Dominion in the near future.
