GREAT GOLF PLAYING AT BROOKLINE COURSE

It was nearly 11 o'clock before Louis Teller, of France, got away and almost noon when Edward Ray, of England, the last of the foreigners, began the initial round with Tom Anderson, Jr. of the Oakmont Club, of Pittsburgh. Among the other starters were George Cummings, of Toronto, playing against H. K. Hamilton, of North Andover, and H. K. Hamilton, of Ottawa, against Francis Omet, the Massachusetts amateur champion.

Before the field of sixty-four players who had survived the two qualifying rounds lay more than fourteen miles of ups and downs of the Country Club course with chopping and chattering of the hundred yards at the greens. The length of the course is a trifle under 3 1/2 miles, to be played twice today and tomorrow. For the golfer professional and amateur who plays this stretch of country, the holes out the 72 four inch cups are the least number of strokes, much more aware of the honor of the 50 $800 in cash to the professional and while a winning amateur will receive a gold medal.

The leaders in the first round up to the luncheon hour were: Alex Ross, of Braintree, and MacDonald, of Braintree, both with a 71; J. C. Crane, of Braintree, with a 72; H. W. H. Hilton, of Braintree, with a 73; J. J. McDermott, Atlantic City, 74; Vardon and Reid were tied for sixth place at 75.
