

A Splendid Work.

The "Shooting Times."—Our cousins who dwell on the other side of the broad Atlantic, both in the United States and Canada, are very fond of spending a holiday in camp during the summer months. In some of these camp gatherings, preparations for comfort, etc., are made on a very elaborate scale. In the volume now on review, the author graphically describes an outing in the wilds of British Columbia, somewhere in the neighborhood of the Fraser river delta.

No doubt our lady friends at home will be glad to learn how the fair sex of Canada, enjoy a sojourn for a time in the forests of the Far, Far West. It is a pity that, during the summer months, our youths and lasses of Old England, do not enter into camp and try a little roughing it. The life is healthy, and, for those who are not weakly, most enjoyable. By its perusal, our young people of the United Kingdom can certainly pick up a wrinkle in camping-out.

A Delightful Tale.

The "Imperial Newsagent."—A delightful tale of a domestic "Camp-out," told with great spirit. It is out of the usual run of books altogether, and is as fresh as the open-air.
