GERMANS FORCED TO REPAIR RUINS

Devastation of the Hun in France Mended by Teuton Prisoners

Behind the British Lines in France, June 27.—(Correspondence)—Hundreds of miles of the smooth white macadam roads of Northern France will remain for many years after the war as a real memorial to the devastated towns which the Germans left in ruins after their retreat this spring.

All over Northern France, the roads are being widened and resurfaced with stone and rubble taken from the wrecked houses of Peronne, Albert, Arras, and countless other ruined towns and villages. As fast as the British soldiers clear away the debris of the towns, it is piled into lorries and distributed in heaps along the main roads. There German prisoners tell the day long pounding into level patches which the great steam rollers, many of them bearing familiar names, grind quickly into smooth macadam for the business of transport.

The brick and stone of these old buildings makes a good road material as could be obtained anywhere and the work of the German dynamiter has been so thorough that much of it is crushed fine enough to need no further preparation.

The roads of Northern France were always excellent, but they were never better than to-day. The only complaint travellers had against them in the days was that the paved strip in the center was too narrow. That complaint cannot be made after the British highway plans have been completed, for all the main highways will be macadamized to a width permitting three broad-gauge lorries to run abreast, and even the byways will have a paved surface wide enough to allow traffic to pass easily at any point.

Excessive dustiness is the only fault of the roads to-day, for war economies will not permit the use of precious oil on roadways.

There is little need anywhere in this district for straightening roads or altering routes, because the roads of Northern France mostly run straight as an arrow's flight. Most of the great highways were laid out in Napoleon's time by military surveyors, and their strategic value and importance has always been kept primarily in mind by the French government.

SISLER TOLD TO START SOMETHING

Fielder Jones Wants Michigan Star to Take Initiative on Field

SECOND ONLY TO COBB

George Sisler will have no one to blame but himself if he doesn't go out and play the game of the map. He is free to go the limit. Manager Fielder Jones, who has been accused of trying to do the thinking for his whole team, had a heart-to-heart talk with Sisler the other day, and spoke to the Michigan star something like this:

"You are the best player in baseball outside of Ty Cobb. At your age and with your ability you ought to be as good a player in time as Cobb, or even better, if that's possible. But you won't unless you get out and do things like Cobb does—initiate plays. I'd like to see you start something; once in a while, at least."

"You're all wrong," answered Jones. "I want you to be just as fresh as they make them, if you call it that."

"Here are your standing orders. Play your own game. Hit when you please, run as far as you like, steal when you think the time is ripe, make the other players after you or ahead of you. Do just what Ty Cobb does on his team—be the whole thing."

Jones believes these instructions, if carried out, will make Sisler a greater player. He thinks he has been too diffident. He wants to see him pull some of the stuff that Ty pulls and believes he can get away with just as much of it.

Jones is always preaching Cobb to his players, but it is more than any considerable number could go out and do Cobb stuff. He really believes Sisler can, though. At least he wants him to try.

Jones has noted particularly since his return to the American league that the runners can't get away on old days and hit as often as they used to. He has noted particularly since his return to the American league that the runners can't get away on old days and hit as often as they used to. He has noted particularly since his return to the American league that the runners can't get away on old days and hit as often as they used to.

"Study their feet, their legs, their arms and their heads when they are pitching—get the ball in the air, what they mean to do, for every pitcher has his peculiarities. That's what we used to do. I remember how we used to study Cy Young. We discovered that with a man on first base he'd always look over to the base twice, then jerk his head to the left before pitching. We knew he'd pitch after that second look, and jerk of the head, and away we'd go on him for second, and even Loc Origer couldn't throw us out."

"One day one of our coaches at first spilled the beans when he cried to the base-runner: 'He's peeped over twice—go!'"

"Patsy Tobeau, playing first, heard it, figured it out, and after that we didn't steal so many bases on Young and Origer."

WOMEN READY FOR STANDARD DRESS

New Dignity Imparted by War to Uniforms of Every Variety

London, June 27.—(Correspondence)—There has never been a time when women were more willing to accept standard dress uniforms than they are at present.

That is the most marked effect of the war upon women's dress. All uniforms have acquired dignity in women's eyes. The household does not object to the cap and apron badge of servitude, the worker in the bank dons an overall cheerfully, women in khaki, the Red Cross and volunteer aid workers are proud of their uniforms.

An expert French designer, discussing these changes, says: "There has never been a time when women who try to insist upon something quite different from the style of the moment, but nowadays their number is greatly diminished. The uniform idea has arrived. It may mean the total extinction of dress-making as a creative art, but there will be developments on other lines."

"There has never been a great war which has not influenced fashion in a picturesque or even gruesome fashion, and this world war has done its share. We had a fashion adapted as a compliment to each Ally, the Russian caps and tunics, the Bersaglieri hats of the Italian soldiers, and the Serbian colors. Scotch plaids have given the Parisiennes great joy.

"Khaki shades are in vogue for spring and summer costumes, and the blue-gray, with touches of cream, of the French uniforms is seen here and there."
