

BEAVER

"BEAVER FLOUR" is the unfailing friend of the housewife. It saves her the trouble of keeping two kinds of flour—one for bread and another for pastry. Being a perfect blend of Manitoba Spring wheat and Ontario Fall wheat, it gives to bread the rich, nutritious properties of the former and the lighter qualities of the latter, making a large white loaf of delicate texture and exquisite flavor. Pastry, biscuits and cakes, made with BEAVER FLOUR cannot be excelled. Ask your Grocer for it today.

Tale of Mystery

CHAPTER XXII.

A LAST DEED.

"To save my sister," Daphne resumed, as though she had not been interrupted, "from the shame of witnessing the delivery of her friend to your greedy and murderous hands!"

"So you still think and hope you can keep Mrs. Markham's fortune for yourself, eh?" he asked, flashing a look at Dessie.

"You can take your choice of course, therefore," continued Daphne.

"But you can't do it. I'm not such a fool as to leave you the chance of coming between me and my plans, and you" (to Dessie) "of breaking your friend's heart under the cowardly guise of pretending to shield her, when your object is to keep a clutch on her money."

"You can do as you please," retorted Daphne. "Either give up the whole scheme, marriage, jewels and all, and leave the country, or go to the police, inform them that you know where Red Delilah can be found, and stand your chance that way. Adolphe Colimbert may not be an unwelcome visitor himself at Scotland Yard, and this I swear!"

she flashed for a moment out of her calm, and her voice rang with deep intensity of feeling—"not another hour shall pass, unless you leave the country, without Scotland Yard knowing that the Count de Montalt and Adolphe Colimbert are one and the same person."

SHE SUFFERED FIVE YEARS

Finally Cured by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

Erie, Pa.—"I suffered for five years from female troubles and at last was almost helpless. I went to three doctors and they did me no good, so my sister advised me to try Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, and when I had taken only two bottles I could see a big change, so I took six bottles and I am now strong and well again. I don't know how to express my thanks for the good it has done me and I hope all suffering women will give Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound a trial. It was worth its weight in gold."

—Mrs. J. P. ENDLICH, R. F. D. No. 7, Erie, Pa.

Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, made from native roots and herbs, contains no narcotic or harmful drugs, and to-day holds the record for the largest number of actual cures of female diseases we know of, and thousands of voluntary testimonials are on file in the Pinkham laboratory at Lynn, Mass., from women who have been cured from almost every form of female complaints, such as inflammation, ulceration, displacements, fibroid tumors, irregularities, periodic pains, backache, indigestion and nervous prostration. Every suffering woman owes it to herself to give Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound a trial.

He laughed—and a perfectly easy self-assured laugh it was.

"Just as you please. The whole thing is getting very interesting and almost exciting. But you've made one little miscalculation. You, Dorothy, not Daphne; she"—and he pointed at the latter—"wouldn't have made it. Your rich friend is already all but my wife. We left London yesterday together for a destination no one knows, and we are to be married to-morrow morning privately—I have the special license—and in the evening we leave for the Continent on our honeymoon—a pair of happy, trust me, devoted lovers." He told the lie with emphatic precision.

"I don't believe it," exclaimed Dessie, excitedly.

"He shrugged his shoulders and raised his hands.

"Nevertheless it is true," he retorted, "and you may ask your most remarkable and experienced sister whether I am not quite calculated to hold what I have once won."

"I don't believe it," repeated Dessie.

He laughed again, as if at her scepticism, but in reality to conceal the thoughts that were fast crowding up on him. He was beaten, and only at the last moment when he had made sure that he stood on the very threshold of success. But he meant to yield fighting, and so long as there was a bare possibility of winning he would carry on the struggle.

With the elder sister in London, ready to face the exposure and go through with her trial for the murder of the Indian prince, all his power over both the girls was broken. He could only hope to win all and openly so long as the girls were kept apart and Dessie could be frightened into silence to save her sister at any cost.

But there were other ways of winning beside these which were open and on the surface. The Robihood jewels were worth half a king's ransom; thousands could be got for them as a reward for their restitution alone, while if a means could be found of selling them, they were worth a fortune.

Of the two he would as soon have the jewels as the widow, and it was for this purpose he had told them of the arrangement to marry the widow on the following day.

After a long pause he dropped the bantering, sneering tone in which he had chiefly spoken, and said, with a kind of calculated bluntness:

"Now tell me what is your real object in this? Is it to compel me to lose my hold on Mrs. Markham? If so, what terms do you offer?"

The change in his manner disgusted Dessie, but the elder sister read it aright. Either the man wanted to make terms or to hide some other object and plan.

"You can leave the country," she replied readily.

"Not enough," he said.

"What do you want?"

"The jewels, and at least a thousand pounds. I shall get more from Mrs. Markham."

"You'll not have a thousand pence from me; and as for the jewels, not a stone of them. Do what you will."

He rose from his chair as though in answer to the challenge.

"Nothing that you can do can prevent me marrying Mrs. Markham to-morrow—nothing shall prevent it; and when once she is my wife—" He finished the sentence with a look which he intended to be a threat; and in that sense Dessie instantly interpreted it.

"Why not give up the jewels?" she cried impetuously, looking at Daphne, and at the same time putting her hand to her dress as if to take them out. The man noticed the gesture quickly and turned his face away that the elder sister should not see his eyes.

He knew now where the jewels were; and the curt refusal by Daphne that followed did not concern him.

"As you will," he said, assuming an expression of baffled anger and intense mortification. "But I'll be frank with you. To-morrow Mrs. Markham will be my wife, and then you may be sorry enough that you refused my terms."

With that he opened the door violently and slammed it angrily behind him. When he was halfway down the staircase he stopped to think. An idea had occurred to him and he set his quick busy wits to work to think out its details.

The gesture which Dessie had made, as if to take the jewels out of the bodice of her dress, had shown him that she was carrying them on her.

His scheme was simply not to lose sight of the girl until the rubies were in his possession; and to do this he resolved on the daring plan of getting Dessie herself into his power.

He argued—and a shrewd enough argument it was—that so long as the rubies remained out of the safe they would be in Dessie's care. He had left it all uncertain whether or not he meant to accuse Daphne of the murder of the Indian, Matwand; and, obviously it would be the height of imprudence for her to risk being arrested with the property of the murdered man actually in her possession. Such a thing would make it infinitely more difficult to prove that she was innocent of the crime. Moreover, only Dessie herself could go to the safe to put the rubies back there; while it was extremely probable that her first instinct would be to rush off to South Kensington to ascertain whether Mrs. Markham had really left London with him.

His task was thus to make sure that Dessie had no chance of putting the rubies back into the safe until he should have had an opportunity of taking them from her; or of ransacking them about with her; or of ransacking her rooms for them if she left them there.

To get her into his power he resolved to use once more the man who had wanted to marry her, and was, he knew, willing to go to almost any lengths for that end—Sir Edmund Landale.

He wrote a hasty note to the latter. "Come at once with your brougham to the corner of Great Russell Street, and then come on foot to the corner of D. M.'s Street, where you will find me waiting for you. If I am not there, drive as quickly as you can to Edgware Square, South Kensington, and wait for me at the north end of the Square. Do not delay a moment. You can win D. M. now certainly if you will."

He gave the letter with a liberal tip to a hansom cabman, and told him to drive as quickly as he could to Sir Edmund Landale's address; and as soon as the man had whisked his horse round and started off at a fast trot the Count chose a spot where he could watch the door of the house where Dessie had her rooms, and waited for her to come out. If his calculations were right, she would come out soon, because she would be in a hurry to get to South Kensington and ascertain the news about Mrs. Markham.

His plan was to follow Dessie, to get her involved in a street row, and to arrange that Sir Edmund Landale should appear in the middle of it as if by chance, step in, save the girl from those who might be molesting her, put her into his carriage and drive her away. He knew, too, that the baronet had a place, a house in the suburbs, to which Dessie could be taken; and once safely housed there, the rest would be comparatively easy.

As he stood waiting, de Montalt watched the people in the street until a woman of the kind he wanted passed. He spoke to her; told her that he would give her a couple of sovereigns if she and one or two more would hustle and mob Dessie at a signal from him. They were not to harm her; but they might pretend to recognize her as an old companion; and if she was indignant, to abuse and threaten her. If the two sisters came together, they would be separated in some way; while the whole thing was to be stopped when a gentleman should get out of a carriage and come to Dessie's rescue.

The woman was glad enough to have a chance of earning the money easily, and did not stop to ask what was to happen.
