

"A skin you love to touch"

You, too, can have this charm

No matter what other charms you have, they count for little unless you have the greatest of all charms—a clear, fresh skin.

An authority on the skin has said: "Whatever your difficulty is, you can remedy the trouble, if you will only give your skin intelligent care and attention."

The following treatment brings the blood to the surface and stimulates the small muscular fibres. Begin it tonight and see how it will improve your skin.

Just before retiring, wash your face and neck with plenty of Woodbury's Facial Soap and warm water. After rinsing your face with warm water, rub a fresh lather of Woodbury's into your skin, using an upward and outward motion. Do this until the skin feels just a little sensitive. Then rinse the skin well in warm water, then in cold, finishing by rubbing for thirty seconds with a piece of ice. Always be careful to dry the skin thoroughly.

Make this treatment a regular habit, and in a much shorter time than you would imagine, your skin will take on the greater loveliness that it can have.

Get a cake of Woodbury's Facial Soap and begin tonight the treatment your skin needs. You will find Woodbury's on sale at any drug store or toilet goods counter in the United States or Canada. A 25 cent cake will last a month or six weeks.

Englishmen With Foreign Titles.

People were surprised recently to read that the Spanish tenants of the Duke of Wellington had gone on strike. As a matter of fact, the Duke of Wellington holds peerages in no fewer than four different countries. In Spain he is Duque de Ciudad Rodrigo; in Portugal, Marquess of Torres Vedras and Dourado, and in Belgium, Prince of Waterloo.

There are just a score of our peers who hold foreign titles and what is more curious—double that number of English people who, while at home they have no rank at all, yet in other countries are Lord this or Lord that.

That rather retiring nobleman, the Duke of Richmond, is Duc d'Aubigny in France; the Duke of Marlborough is a Prince of the Holy Roman Empire; the Earl of Clancarty (lately deceased) was Marquess of Heusden in Holland; while if Lord Bridport goes to Italy he rises several steps in rank and becomes Duke of Bronte.

Another important Italian title owned by a Scottish noble family is that of the Dukedom of Montrose, the holder of which is Earl of Newburg, and a descendant of the Barons of Callender and Kennaird.

Still a third Italian title, a barony is held by the English family of Heath. The late Baron Rothschild was an Austrian baron years before he was raised to the British peerage.

Count Bentinck, whose title is Dutch is descended from the first Earl of Portland. The family have had Royal permission to use their title here.

Lord Dundonald is known in Brazil as the Marquess of Maranhão, an honour conferred upon his famous ancestor, the great Admiral Cochrane. There is even a Russian peerage in the possession of one English family, the barony which was conferred upon Dr. Dimsdale in 1712 by the famous Empress Catherine.

Rats Put Cat to Flight.

Swarms of rats, made savage by starvation, a means instituted by quarantine officials to eradicate them, have attacked and put to flight a large cat family and otherwise played havoc aboard the steamship Leviathan, formerly the German liner Vaterland.

Since the Leviathan has been tied up at a Hoboken pier her rodent population has multiplied into legions and infest her eleven decks and intricately-subdivided interior. Fumigation was found impracticable by officers who sought to remove them, and starvation tactics were employed several weeks ago, no particle of food being permitted aboard.

After the feline army was gone, the rats attacked the ship's furnishings, luxurious leather cushions, panels and other fittings being gnawed beyond repair.

Quarantine officers say, however, that the end is in sight. In their battle for life, they declared, the rodents would destroy one another.

From Slavery to Wealth.

Born a slave, and now reputed to be one of the wealthiest and most respected negroes in the South, David T. Howard, 71, of Atlanta, Ga., last week celebrated his golden wedding anniversary and made it occasion to give some advice to members of his race.

Beginning on a legacy of $150, left by his former master, Howard now owns a business rated as the fourth largest of its kind in the city, and financial institutions readily make loans on his name.

"I never wasted time, never went in for wild oats, never saw a baseball game, and never danced a step—just always attended to my business," said Howard. "No social equality for me; no sane thinking negro wants it."

The United States negro to-day, Howard said, wants better justice in courts, better accommodation on railroads, better schools for his children. "Too many silk shirts and too much good time," said he, "were the cause of racial unrest."

Oxford Letter Aroused Controversy

A heated controversy has been aroused in England during the past week over a letter signed by 57 members of the Faculty of Oxford University to educators in Germany and Austria, urging them to "assist in the healing of an amicable reunion which civilization demands." Dean Inge, of St. Paul's, in a speech before the Church Congress, supported the peace move with the statement that "I don't think any impartial verdict in history will acquit our late enemies of waging the war atrociously, but they think we are waging a peace atrociously, and I am terribly afraid they are right. It is absurd to treat everyone living between the Rhine and Danube and the Vistula as if he personally was responsible for the sinking of the Lusitania. It is our policy to heal the wounds of war not to keep them rankling." Oxford students and professors who refused to endorse the letter denounced it as unrepresentative of general opinion there. The letter may lead to unexpected international complications, as it is considered by the French press as uncalled for and is likely to have a detrimental influence on Anglo-French relations.

Calling marriage "a tragedy for which the mind must be adequately prepared," Germaine de la Brosse of Paris, French artist, has designed a black apartment in which she and her prospective husband will spend their honeymoon. The nine rooms of the apartment are covered with black, some with black velvet, others with satin, linen or wallpaper. Curtains and portieres are black. Black the furniture, black the bed, black the sheets, black the tableware. The bathtub is a huge block of black marble. The bride's trousseau is a mass of black chiffon and chintilly lace, while she has sent notes written with white ink on black paper informing her friends that only black-clad persons will be received.

Nameless Soldier to Repose in Westminster.

Great Britain plans to pay tribute to her soldiers who died in the great war by placing the body of an unidentified soldier alongside those of her kings, statesmen, illustrious poets and warriors in their final resting place in Westminster Abbey. The approval of King George and the Archbishop of Canterbury, according to reports, has been obtained, and the selection of a nameless hero and the burial site are being made.

The grave will be indicated by the inscription: "Here lies an unknown soldier who fell in the war of 1914-1919."

Simultaneously with burial on November 11, at the celebration of the armistice anniversary King George will unveil the cenotaph memorial to the Britons who fell in the war which has been erected in Whitehall. The unveiling will take place shortly before the firing of cannon at 11 o'clock, when the armistice began two years ago. Silence will be observed for two minutes throughout the British Isles.

Bride's Home to Be All Black.

(From the London Times.) The keenest public interest centres around the Prince of Wales, and though there is the strongest desire to respect his privacy, the public watch him with almost parental anxiety. Everywhere fervent wishes for his health and prosperity are the staple of conversation. It would be strange if the topic of his marriage were not very often on the lips and in the hearts of his countrymen near to the hearts of his countrywomen. He is twenty-six, and the marriage of the Prince of Wales is inevitably a matter of deep public concern. We desire to speak of it with proper reticence, expressing, within these bounds, what we believe to be the real anxiety of the country that he should make a wise choice. The war, in this as in most other things, has, we believe, wrought a change in public opinion, which—here and elsewhere in the Empire—would, we are convinced, be strongly averse from the thought that there should be any compulsion upon the Prince of Wales to make a marriage of policy. For him, within the comparatively narrow limits that his position must impose upon him, the British peoples would wish a marriage of true happiness; and this, it is our way to believe, means a marriage of inclination. It follows naturally that the hope for him is that his wife may be one of his own race; for, though there have been fortunate exceptions, it is certainly true that marriages of policy with Princesses of foreign birth have not always had the primary condition for happiness. Farther than to give expression to this national wish for the Prince we shall not go; adding only that we doubt whether there is now the need that there may have been before the war to limit the choice of the Prince to the circle of the Blood Royal.

Telephone to Communicate With Dead

All Paris is stirred by the statement of Thos. A. Edison that he has invented a telephone to communicate with the dead. The opinion of Camille Flammarion, the noted French astronomer and scientist, is as follows:

"Edison's apparatus need not be a chimera. I admit I do not understand what substance he will use to establish the connection between the corporeal bodies of this world and the astral bodies of the other. Solenium, perhaps, but it seems to me that even the smallest human brain, or the brains of any living creature, dog or cat, would be more sensitive than any metal or metalloids."

"If our heads, within our skulls, we already have the instrument which enables us to communicate with the dead. No human invention will ever surpass it. We don't know how to use it yet. But that will come in time."

"For the soul exists, survives after death. Matter is but a clothing of the spirit. Nothing disappears—everything changes."

"Our dead are still living. They see us. They hear us. In many cases they are still interested in terrestrial matters, and sometimes are able to convey signs of this interest in us."

"As a scientist I cannot affirm that the soul is immortal. But I do affirm that the soul lives long after the body is dead, and that in time man will be able to control the fluids which make communication between the realm of death and life possible."

Will Ask Same Assistance as Sugar Men.

Ottawa, Oct. 26.—Claiming that it is just as reasonable to give aid to other branches of merchandising which have been "interfered" with by the Board of Commerce, retail clothiers and shoe dealers will expect the Government to give them financial assistance if similar support is given the sugar refiners in Canada, as is anticipated. This attitude was expressed at a meeting of the executive of the Ottawa Branch of the Retail Merchants' Association held this morning to discuss various matters in connection with Ottawa branch affairs, and embodied in a resolution which will be put before the first meeting of the branch for endorsement.

Miss Pankhurst Wrote Letter to Lenin.

London, October 26.—Sylvia Pankhurst, the militant suffragette, in a letter which she wrote to Nikolai Lenin, the Bolshevik Premier and which is in the hands of the Government, is said to have made this interesting comment:

"I expect six months' imprisonment. I have considered the hunger strike, but I am afraid that weapons have been destroyed, since the Government is letting the Irish hunger strikers die."

Miss Pankhurst was arrested last week charged with publishing seditious literature. She was admitted to bail pending trial.

Several years ago Miss Pankhurst was among the first of alleged offenders against British law and order who went on hunger strikes after they were arrested and secured their release from prison.
