Order has dethroned confusion at Queen's Park, and the great Western Fair may now be seen in its entirety. The finishing touches were applied Saturday night and Sunday, when trains discharged carload after carload of live stock, shipped directly from the Industrial Exhibition at Toronto. The animals were no doubt glad to leave the confinement of the railroad cars for the handsome and roomy new quarters awaiting them. It is said that a number of the veteran horses, cattle, swine and sheep that have visited the Western Fair for some years expressed their grateful surprise at the change, by re-spectively neighing, lowing, bleating and squealing in a very demonstrative

The long rows of horse stalls, which were mostly vacant until Saturday night, are now filled with equine beauties. There never was such a display of horses at the Fair before, thanks to the increased accommodation.

But the greatest surprise of all was the influx of live stock. When the directors built those immense sheds, one block long, they did not dream that space would be lacking on the very first occasion they were used. All Saturday the kine and the swine the swine like the skin had been stretched over the skull without any padding of flesh or fat. Chairman Trebilcock, of that department, not to be outwitted, started at once to secure temporary quarters, and luckily secured one of Pawnee Bill's big tents. Cattle and sheep were to be seen grazing on the park, unable to secure admission to Everything may now be seen that is to be seen. All the ring attractions were shown this afternoon. The fireworks and the illumination of the grounds will be begun tonight.

THE CITY LOOKS BUSY. The city is assuming a genuine Fair appearance. The outside crowds started to arrive today, and the streets are becoming busier. The weather is cool, though cloudy, and the attendance at the grounds at the time of going to press is very gratifying. SATURDAY'S RING ATTRACTIONS.

Children's Day at the Fair was a complete success. The attendance was away up in the thousands, and equaled, if it did not exceed, that of former years. The admission fee of 10 cents per head does not yield an enormous revenue for the Fair board, but it does yield them the satisfaction of knowing that they place the Fair within reach of the poorest child. Besides, nost of the children are accompanied by parents and adult relatives, so that a good many quarters find their way to the cash box.

The climax is reached when the Samson of the troupe, Abdallah, bears while he stands the combined weight of the other eleven members of the company-1,625 pounds in all. wheels, covered several hundred feet of the race track by hand-springs and back somersaults in less time than many could run the same distance.

The majority of the troupe are thoroughbred, simon-pure Arabs, having the swarthy complexions, brilliant dark eyes and black, curly hair of their race. Two or three, who are lighter complexioned, are the sons of English officers and Arabian women. English officers and Arabian women, so Hassan Ben Ali, the chief, told a reporter. Hassan Ben Ali is a reremarkably intelligent man. He says he met the members of his troupe ten years ago in Mecca, where they had cathered during the annual pilgrimage to the shrine of Mohammed. Has-Hassan combined business with his devotions, and organized the company on the spot. They made a European tour before they came to America. Hassan showed the reporter a medal from the King of Portugal and another from the Sultan of Turkey, who also gave them two horses. They were at the World's Fair and Chicago, and previous to that performed privately before President Harrison, and received a certificate from him. The members of the troupe, besides Hassan Ben Ali, rejoice in these euphonious names: C. F. Hassan son of Col. McLean of The Fair Crowds Have

His hair hangs down his back, but he dresses in conventional garb and is rather an aristocratic cowboy. His followers, however, have the air of the prairies about them. The Indians were certainly curiosities. There is not the slightest suggestion of Muncey or Chippewa in these bucks. They are unadulterated aborigines from 'way back—just as Fenimore Cooper pictured them in "The Pathfinder" and other rovels which have delighted the imagination of youth. Toronto, Ont., Sept. 14.—The Stevens-Zimpfer scrap at the Toronto Rowing Club's island quarter ended ingloriously for Stevens, who quit in the eighth round, claiming that Zimpfer was fouling him, but where the foul came in was not apparent to the spectators. The first round was merely a sparring exhibition, in which Stevens carried off the honors. In the second the lads went at one another in earnest. In one mix-up Zimpfer claimed that Stevens bit him, and his shoulders showed evidence of Stevens' masticatory efforts. The latter up to the seventh round had the best of go. In that round Zimpfer landed several swings. Just as the bell was sounded they clinched, and Stevens broke away, shouting foul. He went to his corner, and despite the frantic appeal of his seconds, he drew off his gloves and refused to continue. Lovett, the referee, awarded the fight to

If Corbett should not fight Sailor Sharkey, of San Francisco, whom he is matched to meet before the end of this year, then Pompadour Jim agrees to fight Fitzsimmons any time before that date. But should he fight Shar-key, Corbett declares that he will not be ready to meet Fitzsimmons in the ring until 60 days after that contest is decided. To this arrangement "Lanky Bob" gave his assent.
