We first thought it was another earthquake, but one of the waiters ran in and said the back of the club house or St. James aquare was blown in with dynamite. We went down stairs and found that the explosion had taken place in the area opposite the scullery and back kitchen windows, which were all blown in, with the frame and part of the walls. The poor girls who were engaged in washing up after dinner were the chief sufferers. They were cut and mangled with broken glass and flying porcelain. They were at once sent to the hospital.
