trines implies no insult or no dissent from the doctrines of other churches; and it is extravagant to say, because I prefer a certain form of faith and establish it, it hereby involves me in the necessity of insulting or persecuting another. (Hear, hear.)—And that is an objection not dependent upon majorities or minorities. You may think it right on account of the majority of its members to establish a religion in a country; but whatever teason may be urged in favour of an establishment, it does not imply the question of the free judgment of others, or the persecation of any other sect. (Hear, hear.) I consider the pro-Positions of the hon. member for Sheffield to amount to nothing more or less than a total subversion of the Established Church. He said, "Let us divide the revenues of the Church into three Parts: give 70,000l. to the Presbyterian Church, 70,000l. to the Protestant Church, and 430,000l. to the Roman Catholic the Roman Catholic Church, who says, "I pride myself on my independence. I submit to no control." Why, sir, that is the very reverse of equality, it is great injustice. (Hear.) The principle of mere majority leads to the establishment of the Roman Catholic religion. Is the noble lord prepared for that in all its cousequences? Is he prepared to send men not nominated by the Crown, but by a foreign spiritual authority, to take their seats in the House of Lords? There is no equality if he do not as the country of the if he do not go that length. The proposal is to relieve ourselves from our difficulties by destroying the Church. I must say, a more unreasonable and unjust proposition was never made. Here is a religion guaranteed by solemn acts of parliament, by ong prescription, the Protestant religion, which is in allia with the state, which has endowed it for 250 years. I am told I cannot maintain it, not because they want the Roman Ca-tholic religion to be established, but because it is inconvenient that an Establishment should contain what will promote religious peace in Ireland? Do you believe it will promote mutual concord to say to the Protestants, "Civil disabilities have been removed, equality of franchise has been granted, we now tell removed, equality of franchise has been granted, we now tell you we cannot maintain the Established Church any longer, and you must relinquish it?" You don't know to what extent you should then go. Is it mere endowments? What will you do as to the places of worship? Do you mean that you would confer religious page on the confer religious page on the confer religious page on the confer religious page. confer religious peace on the country to call upon the Protestants to sacrifice their endowments and to transfer the Church to the Roman Catholics? "And hence, in fair remembrance worn, Yon sheaf of spears his crest has borne, Hence his high motto stands revealed, 'Ready, aye ready,' for the field."—Scott.

The present peer of this title is descended by the male line from Sir Francis Scott, of Thirlestane, Bart., who, in 1699, married Elizabeth, daughter and heiress of Margaret, Baroness Napier, the descendant and representative of Sir John Scott, of Thirlestane, in Berwickshire, who flourished in the reign of James V., and possessed the estates of Thirlestane, Gamescleugh, &c., lying upon the river of Ettrick, and extending to St. Mary's Loch, at the head of Yarrow. It appears that when James had assembled his nobility and their feudal retainers at Fala, with the number of invading England was as is Fala, with the purpose of invading England, and was, as is well known, disappointed by the stubborn refusal of his peers, this Baron alone declared himself ready to follow the King wherever he should lead. The issue of the battle which ensued, in the vicinity of Solway Moss, is also well known; the whole Scottish army was either taken or dispersed, and it is said that this disastrous event hastened the King's death In memory of his fidelity, James granted to his family a coat of arms and the said of the sa arms entitling them to bear a border of fleurs-de-lis, s treasure in the Royal arms, with a bundle of spears for the crest; motto-'ready, aye ready.'

The centre part of this façade, also contains two arcades, for foot passen. gers from Front-street to the interior of the Market-square; which being on the same level as the wharves, and considerably lower than Front-street, gave the architect an opportunity of providing a commodious Corn-exchange, for the use of farmers and corn-factors frequenting this market; which it should be observed, is to be more particularly appropriated for the sale of grain, &c. The wings on the front are to be occupied on the ground floor by butchers' stalls, &c.—the floors above being devoted to the offices of the various departments connected with the city business. The east and west sides of the build ings, enclosing the Market-square, and which extend 136 feet from Front-street towards the Lake, contain arched recesses on the market level, for the purpose of enabling farmers to back their waggons under, and thus protect their produce from the weather; and, the first floors of these sides are to be divided into shops for fruiterers, seedsmen, &c.

tracted and severe illness, which he bore with Christian forti-tude and patience, deeply regretted by relatives and friends. At Montreal, on the 8th instant, William Walker, Esquire, Advocate, aged 46 years. Mr. Walker was well known in this community and throughout Canada, as a man of superior talents. He was one of the "choice spirits" of his class, and an ornament to his profession, the Law, which he prosecuted with great success. As a political writer, he was superior to the generality of persons who write for the Press in this Colony; and in all the discussions which, as a public journalist, he had to carry on with his opponents, his writings were almost invariably marked by that absence of acrimony and bad spirit which, we regret to say, are the most striking features of the greater portion of the Canada Press. When this Journal was first established in 1833, Mr. Walker was the principal writer for it, and we can refer to its columns as an evidence of what we here assert. His loss will be felt by many sincere friends, and by none more than those, who, while they disagreed with
