

public and our public has sufficiently realised what will inevitably be the influence, of the peoples of the East on the destinies of a country in the northern half of the North American continent. People there were happy to learn of the visit of their ambassador of goodwill, as they put it, to express to the people of the East our appreciation of their importance in the course of the world events and our confidence that that influence would be exercised in such a way that we could go on and develop and put to use the bounties Providence has bestowed generously upon this vast area of the Northern America. And I will take back to my people even greater confidence in the prospects of the future. So I must thank you, Sir, for this embarrassingly cordial reception these great peoples are affording to their ambassador of goodwill during the few weeks we have been among the people of the East.

(Mr. St. Laurent then proposed the toast of the Prime Minister, Sri Jawaharlal Nehru.)

was no dissenting voice throughout the whole Canadian attempt to do. When it was announced that I was assured the Prime Minister that the people of Canada very helpful to have realism in our concepts of what to be dealt with in a realistic way. And it will be I think it is a healthy thing for us to come to the world have their homes in the continent of Asia. And to realise that rather more than half of the people of really great nations of the world. And we are beginning to know that it can be of the same quality, if not of the same quantity as that which will be done by the world. We know it cannot be a large share but we have much to do and it cannot be done unless the world which still are untapped, we find ourselves in much small population, immense areas and immense resources for a country like mine, with a relatively making any discoveries. But still when we see the existing level, we begin to wonder if we are really being new discoveries. Gradually being released and which we look upon as it possible to derive from the patterns which are and share together the annual increment that nature makes of any continent. But that all can work together and satisfaction from the bounties of wise and all-seeing Providence will also be not the lot of any one country and prosperity and opportunities to derive benefit and any one continent. And likewise we hope that welfare contacts cannot be confined to any one country or even we do realise in our attempt of their life people of land. And I can assure the Prime Minister and the
