

land, and Ireland, on the Revolution found himself under the necessity of leaving Britain, he shewed a particular anxiety for the safety of a little box he carried with him. Being asked what its contents were, he said, it contained the Lives and Fortunes of all the good People of England. Yet not a Shilling was spent, not a Sword was drawn in support of his cause.

Now, the case will be very different, indeed; and I shall under-rate the gratuitous contribution, in support of their favourite Minister, of the City of LONDON, in estimating it at no more than Ten Millions. To LONDON, the great emporium, the great center and repository of the wealth of the World, Ten Millions will never be missed out of its great and boundless circulation;—a single ream of paper more than supplies the want;—to the City of WESTMINSTER I assign Five Millions; to WESTMINSTER, that City of Palaces, the Seat and Temple of refined Luxury, where Pleasure is pushed to the very
