ADELE GARRISON'S NEW REVELATIONS OF A WIFE

Is There Something for Madge to Fear Personally?

If I had been more experienced in wearing what Dicky calls a "poker face," my countenance would never have betrayed to the people sitting around the dining-table that I had seen the German flag peeping from the blouse of one of the women at the table. And before I could control myself my face had flushed and my eyes had flashed in anger at the woman who had dared display the enemy flag on American soil.

In my anger I forgot discretion, and good still for a moment, my eyes fixed upon the edge of the flag. The next moment I had taken an impetuous step forward, and I don't know what I might have said or done if Miss. Hoffer's smooth voice hadn't recalled me to myself—reminded me that I had need for poise instead of emotion.

"Well, do you like them as well as ever?" she asked.

I turned quickly, for her voice had a red undertone beneath its smoothness that told me she had noticed my emotion. Her eyes were dark with suspicion as I turned, but I could see that she was trying hard to conceal the feeling beneath a mask of casualness.

I smothered the flame of anger in my eyes with a blanket of feigned cordiality.

"Oh, yes, indeed!" I returned, speaking in a louder tone than that which I ordinarily use, in order that the people at the table should hear me. "They look exactly the same as when I was last here. You'll only give me my old table by the window I shall be perfectly happy."

My old table by the window was one which commanded a view of the mill. I waited with a little catch of my breath, due to a vague sense of something unknown menacing in the air, for the woman's reply.

"It came promptly enough."

"Why, surely, Miss. Graham. Everything shall be as you wish. Shall I show you my own lavatory now?"

I didn't stop to analyze the impulse which made me reluctant to follow her to her own apartment. I only answered promptly and carelessly.

"Oh, it isn't worth the bother, Miss. Hoffer. I'll just freshen up in the little lavatory off the hall, which I remember perfectly."

As I spoke I turned and walked toward the lavatory of which I spoke. I knew that if Miss. Hoffer didn't wish to show her hand openly she wouldn't try to persist in her invitation to use her own lavatory instead of the public one provided for the female guests.

With lightning-like quickness she had taken but a half-dozen steps, Pete, tittering at my heels, when she called out shortly:

"Miss. Graham, one minute, please!"

I turned as she came hurriedly up to me.

"A thousand pardons, but I must tell you, we cannot allow your dog inside. He can stay on the veranda, can he not?"

I looked at her fixedly.

"Isn't this a new regulation?" I asked slowly. "I distinctly remember seeing dogs in here at different times last year. And my dog is very quiet. He will disturb no one."

"Last year, yes," she said. "But we had so many complaints about them that we had to make a rigid rule against them. I am so sorry, but you will see how it is. I am sure."

Pete Won't Desert.

She didn't look in the least sorry, but she was inflexible. I yielded instantly. "It doesn't matter in the least," I said, although the vague feeling of

DEREHAM WOMAN IS HONORED BY FRIENDS

At Dereham about 75 of the Epworth League members gathered together and presented their president, Mrs. Samuel Morris, with a handsome rocker. An address expressing the appreciation of the members of the league was read by Mrs. Leola Holmes, and the members of the league and Epworth League. Mrs. Morris replied fittingly.

A Farmer's Daughter.
Dear Miss Grey:—Where the readers are asking for lonely soldiers' addresses. Would you please send me one, as I would like very much to write to one. I am a farmer's daughter, and we are pretty busy just now. Well, what do you think about the war now, Miss Grey? I will sign

DAILY BIBLE QUESTION CLUB

Suggestive Question on the Uniform Lesson for Sunday, May 11, 1918.
ONLY GOLDEN TEXT: "SUFFERING, AND BY REV. T. S. LINSFORD, D.D."

Jesus Faces the Cross. Mark 10:32-52.

QUESTIONS FOR TODAY:

1. Verse 32. What is our limit, if any, in asking God to supply our needs? (This is one of the questions which may be answered in writing by members of the club.)

15. Verse 48. What is the ground for assurance, that God, in some gracious way, answers every persistent prayer?

16. If Bartimeus had stopped praying with his first petition, is it likely, or not, that Jesus would have called him?

17. Verse 49. What lesson may we learn from those who rise to stop the boisterous petitions of this blind man, and when his prayer was answered congratulated him?

Golden Text—He humbled himself, becoming obedient even unto death, yea, the death of the cross. Phil. 2:8.

CHRIST'S CRUEL DEATH HAS HALLOWED ALL SUFFERING.

It was divine humility for Christ to come to the earth, but to humble himself, and become obedient even unto death, seems to press upon us his humility even in a more forceful manner. Apart from the greatness of the work which he accomplished by his death, one of its by-products, so to speak, is that it has hallowed, or sanctified, all human suffering. Our brave soldiers, laying down their lives by hundreds of thousands, are, within certain limitations, doing what their elder brother did for them. All our woes and sufferings which are caused by the sickness of sin or others, are of a sacrificial nature. We realize that present suffering is future good, and that the brave and the true are laying down their lives for the great cause of righteousness as Jesus did.
