Here, says Mr. Brailsford, "is the formula of a peace of reconciliation."

"It may be possible by an adroit use of the economic boycott to extract assent to some salutary territorial changes," i.e., use it as an instrument of pressure. Mr. Brailsford feels that the Allies are not clear as to procedure on this point, and asks: "Are we jointly prepared to bargain economic peace against restoration, disarmament, and some concessions to nationality, or are we, each of us for our own ands."
