In the meantime a peculiar situation has been created. The province is with out a court of appeal until the new court has been constituted by the apointment of the judges. This is the THE WILLAMETTE | pointment of the act as it was introduced by the provincial government and now

It is specifically provided in the act that from the coming into force of the court of appeal act the Supreme court shall cease to exercise any appellate jurisdiction with the following exception which are specifically stated viz To deliver judgment in any appeal or motions awaiting judgment or continuing any partly heard appeals or moorders so as to fully and completely

It will thus be seen that until the new judges of the court of appeal are appointed and take their oath of office there is no appellate court to which an appeal can be taken. An inquiry into the situation as it now exists shows there are four appeals upon which judgment is given to-day; two appeals partially heard and their are thirty-two appeals pending. Judging from the record of the count the public business of the court of appeal will occupy only about 72 days, a year divided into four sittings, of 18 days each.

It is contended in many circles, therefore that British Columbia has no need of a court such as has been called into existence and which it is pointed out will be more expensive than the demand creates. An additional judge on the Supreme court it is contended by these would have filled the needs of the
