

MYRTLE HOWARD'S SIN.

It was a charming scene; the village hall decorated with vines and flowers. The soft music from the band and the sweet fragrance of the roses filled all the air with sweet sounds and rich perfume.

GENERAL BUSINESS.

Myrtle Howard stood by the window, looking down the long hall, watching the ever changing scene with a smile of enjoyment. She looked very beautiful to-night—crimson roses in her cheeks, a white dress with crimson at her throat, and she watched the door eagerly, and still the person she was looking for did not come.

"Surely Lewis will be here to-night," she murmured to herself. "How surprised he will be to see me here, how glad I shall be to see him! My noble Lewis!—not my Lewis, but he shall be, for love begets love, they say, and sometimes, if not now, I will love him even as I love him."
