THE ANSWER.

Warm was the sun of the summer, fragrant the breath of the flowers, small sweet things but the flowers; Of woe in this world of ours? O cannot and may not the summer, O cannot and may not the flowers; Are all things and all, Like red in the east, In the glory of the sun, Oh the blast!

O mantle and fall of white gown! O sake and let's part!

Well, well, doth the eye, seeing know, Four spoons as you lope at the door; Our hearts read the story of woe.

Are all things and all, Like red in the east, In the glory of the sun, Oh the blast!

The answer we read in the stars—God's jewels and man's keen delight—O'er earth's small compass and was still shines his ineffable light.

We seek in our hopes on frail spars, Till, reaching the haven at last, Know all things and all, Like red in the east, In the glory of the sun, Oh the blast!

But never more on earth, the blast! —From THE ANSWER for April.

A CALIFORNIA ETCHING.

The district attorney of Murderer's Bar stood up to his knees in the Yuba. But as his rubber boots came to his hips there was no fear of his getting wet as he made the muddy river muddier at his unnecessary labor at the rocker.

Distance lent beauty and picturesque to the district attorney. A nearer view disclosed several details that were not creditable to the guardian of the legal honor of Murderer's Bar. His red shirt, that at a hundred feet off would have seen an artist sketching incontinently, at ten would have made a laundryman groan.

At photograph distance his nose would have wept, for although the district attorney had only been away from Yale two years, and in California one, his nose had acquired a color that, like the hue of a choice mackerel, it could only have gained by steady effort. If the person of his native town could have been concealed on the bank of the Yuba, he would have changed his opinion of the district attorney's pley, for, although the young man was of excellent family, he took clay pipe from between his teeth, and every ably at the poor results of an hour's hand washing being in the bottom of the rocker, when he looked up at the sun and transferred his profanity to that body as he took off his slouched hat and wiped his forehead with his sleeve.

As the district attorney stood smoking his pipe, a head, a heavily arrayed of hair, striking a sly caparison, made, trotted down the bank and cried out:

"I say, are you the boss lawyer of the bar?"

"I am," said the district attorney, patting on his hat.

"Are you on the marry?" asked the stranger pleasantly, as he got to the water's edge.

"No," said the district attorney, looking at a rock by the water's edge.

"Is marrying in yer line?"

"I don't catch your meaning," said the district attorney, looking at the stranger.

"I mean have you ever done any marryin' yerself?" explained the stranger, leisurely cutting a pipe from a plug of tobacco.

"Well, no," said the district attorney. "Why? I'd like ye to apply myself and Mary Brady over at the Flat this night—Mary you know, the daughter of Brady, who keeps the Deed—ke ye do the little thing?"

"Oh, certainly," said the district attorney, without hesitating.

"Brown, who is a distinguished lawyer now, with no bad habits, had his doubts about it. He had never heard of a district attorney marrying people before. But he remorsefully reflected that his studies in his profession had not been profound. Anyway, it was reasonable to suppose that law, like morals and religion, might relax in the California atmosphere on this occasion. And so Brown had said, 'I made up my mind to risk it flat. Besides, I have always prided myself on a good memory, so I had no doubts, after my pious bringing up, that I could remember the marriage service perfectly.'

The wedding was to be celebrated at the Cosmopolitan saloon—Mr. Finnegans had been invited in to be best man, and the district attorney found a large and tipsy company making a tremendous noise and plunging the expectant bride in raw rum, pending the arrival of the bridegroom himself. The company was larger than select. The whole male population of the Flat had come out as a matter of course, deploring the formality of waiting for invitations. There were only three ladies—the bride and her mother, and Mrs. General Hardings, the wife of General Hardings, who was stopping a few weeks at the Flat, with a view to investment. Mrs. Brady having gotten money and lands, by means of the Cosmopolitan, took an interest in the general, and his beautifully dressed lady got an invitation. There were several other ladies living at the Flat, and I regret to say they were not such as could be invited to a wedding.

It was a very lively assemblage indeed. Old Brady himself could hardly keep his feet, and refused to charge for his rum—something that is handed down in the Flat to this day—for when Mr. Brady was sober or even ordinarily drunk, he was a great skink. The boys were sitting round the tables playing cards or standing in the bar in knots. Everybody was speaking at once, and everybody was anxious to drink his glass with everybody else in honor of the bride. The healthy young lass sat between her mother and the General's lady, who were perfect batteries of sorrowing sympathy. Poor Mrs. Brady was as red as a piece of cinnamon, with the excitement and the attention and occasional helpful sips of water. Rum, dozen tumbler of which beverage were constantly extended by gallant hands. General Hardings, the only man present who wore a white shirt, and his very white and large indeed, kept near the blushing Miss Brady, and roused the envy of every Flatter by his manners and handsome person.

"Women, come to order!" exclaimed Mr. Brady, thickly, and knocking a
