Rippling Rhymes

THE HARVEST. The wheat will soon be ready, throughout the golden west, for workers strong and steady to come and do their best; the long green fields are turning to yellow, in the sun, and, viewing them, we're learning how we shall eat the Hun. The wide, wide fields are golden, as grateful to the eyes, as in the ages olden was manna from the skies. For wheat means more than giving a pampered people bread; it's triumph for the living, and vengeance for the dead. The wheat from all these regions where respects soar will sing, will feed our fighting legions, and balk the Kultur King. Old worker, come rejoicing, and bind the golden sheaves, a song of gladness voicing, and not as one who grieves. Oh, toiler, tread the stubble, like victor proud and strong, nor think the task a trouble because the hours are long. As much as men with axes, you fight the Teuton knives, so blithely fight your labors, and not like galley slaves. So to the wheat fields journey as gay as knights of old, who hastened to the tourney on fields of cloth of gold. With courage of the stote, into the harvest prance; there's nothing more heroic on all the fields of France.
