Guilt trips

Editor:

In response to your editorial, "Students should obey picket lines," I ask why should we? If I do not show up to my class how will it have an affect on the outcome of the YUSA strike? By going to my lecture it is not as if I am doing YUSA's job as scab labor. My lectures will take place whether I attend or not. If I don't go no one is affected but myself. What I want to know, is if I honor the picket lines will the YUSA members honor me in return by changing my marks when I fail?

And don't call my attitude selfish, typical of the 'Me-generation' and all that crap. It is you who are selfish for demanding of me to sacrifice my education for the sake of the YUSA strike. I refuse to involve myself in something that I am in reality not part of. How will I, by boycotting my classes, pressure the Administration into settling with the union. I see no co-relation between the two.

To top this frustration off, I'm surrounded by bleeding heart liberals who are trying to lay guilt trips on me for crossing the picket lines. I'm not on either side. To be honest, I have not followed the strike very closely. I only write what I see and think is felt by a lot of other York students. To ask us, who are probably suffering the most from the strike and who are in fact innocent bystanders, to not go to our classes is an imposed fabricated moral dilemma.
