The retreating tide leaves behind it on the sand,—we owe the figure to Dr. Dale, of Birmingham,—sparkling, saline crystals. That is one proof that the sea is salt. Take a bucketful of sea water anywhere and the taste assures us that it holds salt in solution. This is a proof of a different sort, but equally convincing. So, in the New Testament there are texts which expressly declare the deity of Christ,—these are like the crystals on the sand. But besides such explicit proof, there are many passages, sometimes in whole epistles, which contain not a single text directly asserting that Christ is divine, but which are saturated through and through with a belief in that doctrine. In his new book, The Lord of Glory (Hodder and Stoughton, London, U.C. Tract Society, Toronto, 304 pages, $2.00), Dr. B. B. Warfield, of Princeton, is concerned, not with the direct but with the pervasive proof of Christ's essential deity. The sub-title of the book is, A Study of the Designations of our Lord in the New Testament with special Reference to His deity. The conclusion is drawn with irresistible cogency, from a full and minute examination of the names and titles of Jesus, that the early Christian community was convinced from the first of the deity of its Founder, a conviction which cannot be explained, unless it rested on evidence of overwhelming strength.

The Light Eternal (Copp. Clark Company, Toronto, 352 pages, $1.25) is a quaint tale by Peter Rosegger, of a priest, who, for too liberal opinions, was banished by his bishop to a tiny parish of some seven hundred souls in the high mountain tops. There he lived and died, spending strength and heart without stint for the handful of people committed to his care. The tragedies and comedies of life are in abundance in the strange story he tells; it is a little world all by itself in those bleak uplands, and its characters are strongly drawn in the priest's diary, which continues on even after he himself has grown so old and feeble, that the world unseen and the world about him are all one in their tragedies and in their glory.

From the U. C. Tract Society, Toronto, we have received two additional volumes of Dr. Alexander Maclaren's Expositions of Holy Scripture (Hodder & Stoughton, London, $1.25 the volume). One covers Deuteronomy, Joshua, Judges, Ruth and 1 Samuel; the other, 2 Kings, from Ch. viii., 1 and 2 Chronicles, Ezra and Nehemiah. Teachers of the International S. S. Lessons for July to December, of this year will do well to keep an eye to the first of these volumes and to the one, previously noticed, including 1 Samuel, 1 Kings and 2 Kings, Chs. 1 to 7.

The Fleming H. Revell Company has issued Fifth Edition, Revised and Enlarged, with New Illustrations of Jerry McAuley, An Apostle to the Lost (U.C. Tract Society, Toronto, 304 pages, $1.00 net).
