1. It is most beautifully balanced. Re gious things are reserved to the clergy secular ones are shared with the laity. The minister exercises the power of a pastor, but te can nominate officers, but can not constiate then without the concurrence of others. Since the days of Mr. Wesley there has been a gradual introduction of the democratic element into the Wesleyan Church Government. We see this in the election the stationing committee; the nomination of their ministers by quarterly meetings the election of president of the conference annually, and his ineligibility for eight years after his election; in the election of chairreturn 40 town, the presence of the Ray.
