PROGRESS OF THE WAR

[September 7 to September 13]

On the Western front, in the week under review, the British and French made substantial gains on the Somme, the most important for the British being the village of Ginchy which was taken after the fiercest possible fighting, and held in spite of most determined counter attacks. The French made correspondingly important gains on the south of the Somme. In the Verdun sector the French were mostly on the offensive and scored some important victories to the east of Fleury. The fighting at other points of the Western front resulted in no change in positions.

The Eastern campaign was prosecuted with great vigor the whole week. In the Riga sector the Russians advanced a small detachment across the Dvina and held the position in spite of the efforts of the Germans to dislodge them. Halicz, in Galicia, was fiercely bombarded by the Russians, though it was not completely occupied by them at the week's close. The Russians made further important gains in the Carpathians; and the Rumanians continued their advance in Transylvania, the Austrians being unable to hold them in check. They also took the important Hungarian town of Orova, on the Danube, which will now enable them to prevent enemy traffic on the river. The cooperation of Russians and Rumanians in eastern Hungary was proving eminently successful and giving the Teutons cause for serious alarm. German troops were said to be coming to the assistance of the Austro-Hungarians.

The Caucasian campaign seems to have been very active during the week, and the Russians were able to repel all Turkish attacks, which were made in great force west of Erzurum and in the region of Agnost. In Persia also, the Russians won important victories over the Turks.

No events of importance were chronicled in the Mesopotamian campaign; and very little news was forthcoming as to the Egyptian campaign.

The news received of the campaign in German East Africa described the occupation of Dar es Salaam in the previous week, and the capture on September 7 by British bluejackets and marines, of the ports of Kilwa Kivinje and Kilwa Kisiwani, respectively 150 and 175 miles south of Dar es Salaam.

The Balkan campaign was prosecuted with vigor all week throughout the whole Macedonian front and in southern Albania, the Entente Allies (which are represented on this front by men of all the nations composing the Entente Alliance) making some important gains from the Bulgarians and Teutons opposed to them. On the other hand, the Bulgarians, assisted by Turks, made important gains from the Rumanians in Dobruja, where they took Turktuk and Silistria on the Danube; but their success in this corner of Rumania is likely to be short-lived, as Russians were said to be coming to the aid of the Rumanians in this action.

The Austro-Italian campaign was continued with the usual vigor and under the usual difficulties of mountain warfare, the Italians making gains in the Trentino and on the northern front. Venice was again the scene of an Austrian air raid, which resulted in some damage, though apparently not extensive.

In "News of the Sea" will be found an account of all the vessels sunk during the week reported in the daily press. The cause of the disasters is not generally mentioned, and if they were due to submarines there was a marked increase in this form of destruction so much favored by the Germans.

The political situation in Greece received much attention during the week, the premier having resigned and a new one being appointed. The composition of the new cabinet had not been announced on 13th inst. It was presumed that the new advisors of King Constantine would unite all parties and that Greece would enter the war on the side of the Entente Allies. The whole situation in the Balkans is receiving as much attention as is given to any of the other theatres, and a war council of the Central Powers and their Bulgarian and Turkish allies was in session somewhere on the Balkan front at the week's close.

While it is conceded that another campaign is inevitable, it is pretty certain that before the winter campaign sets in some decisive events will take place, perhaps on nearly all fronts.

THE QUEBEC BRIDGE DISASTER

All Canada heard with profound regret that the attempt on Monday last to put the cable span of the Quebec Bridge had failed, and that the span, measuring 640 feet in length and weighing 5200 tons, had sunk to the bottom of the river. St. Lawrence. Twelve men are missing and are believed to have lost their lives. In the absence of an official report on the deplorable accident it is not possible to state exactly the cause of it. The span cost about $1,000,000, and was partially insured.

The former great accident to the bridge occurred on August 29, 1907, and resulted in the complete collapse of the great cantilever on the southern shore, and the loss of seventy lives. The last accident is much less serious, having regard to the number of casualties and the material loss involved.

That the work on the bridge will be resumed, and the construction be completed, there is no doubt; and it is stated that the span will be constructed precisely as before, but a casting (the breaking of which apparently was responsible for the disaster) will be replaced by steel girders. The cantilevers are intact and were not injured by the accident.

The delay in the completion of the bridge is a serious matter; but it is certain that as little time as possible will be lost, and that the hopes of those who were responsible for this great undertaking will be realized ultimately and at no very distant date.

ATLANTIC BIOLOGICAL STATION

Although September in St. Andrews is one of the finest months in the year, its advent is heralded by the beginning of the influx of summer visitors. By the end of August a greater part of the watersiders and their families who had formed a veritable colony at the Biological Station, had departed. Professor Prince left for Ottawa on Monday, and Mr. D. B. Wilson on Wednesday for Toronto, and the Biological Station closed, after what may be said to have been the most successful season in its history. The ideal weather, the wealth of material available, and the large number of the voluntary investigators who were able to come from University and College and take part in the work of unravelling a portion of the riddle of the sea, all contributed to this end. But although the station is closed, the work still goes on. Much will be done during the winter by those who have taken material back to the Universities, and who will still be writing out reports of their discoveries. And in St. Andrews, too, the work does not cease. Dr. Huntman remains till late in the fall to carry to a further stage important studies on the herring and other food fishes. Mr. Wilson will continue the regular collection of samples of the floating organisms or plankton, that he has made for several winters past, but will still further extend the scope of his studies.

It is also intended that more distant waters shall be investigated on trips which are being planned for the head of the Bay of Fundy and for the northern coast of Nova Scotia. The Station launch, Prince, has just returned from a trip of ten days' duration to the coast of Nova Scotia. Work was done at a series of points in the vicinity of Yarmouth, in St. Mary's Bay, and in the deep water ten miles outside Brier Island. Important data were obtained with regard to the more southern character of the fauna on the coast, as compared with that of this side of the Bay of Fundy. By means of special nets it was determined that the large "shrimp" which bulks so largely in the food of our fishes, keeps the deep water of the Bay and remains near the bottom except where carried to the surface by the tide rips, as, for example, in the vicinity of Campobello Island. The minute fish which forms the "red feet" of the herring was found to occur in vast quantities in depths greater than 50 fathoms, and also at a depth of about ten fathoms, but elsewhere the water showed very little animal life. The significance of this, as it affects the herring, remains to be worked out.
