The Countess says that although the Orown Prince was a dissolute man, whose conduct had cost him the love of father, mother and wife, he was or father, mother and wife, he was not primarily to blame for the affair with the Baroness. The girl fell in love with him before he had ever noticed her, and wrote him a letter begging him to meet her. The Countess appears to have assisted to arrange some of the stolen interviews that followed though she protests that that followed, though she protests that she only shielded the girl. But soon gossip connected their names. The indiscretion of the young Baroness went the length of publicly insulting the Crown Princess Stephanie, and it seemed probable that she would be dismissed from the court. A Ghastly Ride

It was in this crisis of their affairs that Rudolph took her with him on a hunting expedition to Meyerling One morning when they did not ap pear at the usual hour, Count Hoyos the attendant of the Prince, broke open the door and found both dead, a small revolver in the hand of Ru-dolph. Calling in another servant whom he could trust, the Count removed the body of the girl to anothe: room. Then he had both doors locked and guarded while he hurried to Vienna with the news of the tragedy t was announced that the Crow Prince had been injured, and after scene the death was announced. In the meantime, the family of the with. Two uncles went down to Meyerling to bring the body home The police insisted that the gir should be dressed, and that the body should be held upright between the two uncles on the seat while they drove in a carriage from the hunting lodge. A few miles away, the car turned into the gates of a monastery, and here the body was hurriedly buried, neither the father nor mother being allowed to be pre-sent and everyone who knew anything of the scandal being sworn to secrecy.

The horse's feet are fastened to swinging shafts that operate in the base by means of a rotatable gear. As one shaft is pushed forward the other cores backward, each carrying with it a foreleg and hindleg on the same side of the animal. The gear is operated by means of a crank and the faster the crank is turned the faster the horse trots, bobbing his head and waving his tail, while the jockey seems to urge him.

Owing to the other ducts, the price of cross-ties has been steadily increasing. The cost of tie maintenance is now a large item of expense and the higher prices of the better grades of wood have forced the railway companies to use inferior woods. In order that the lower grades of wood may be economically used for ties it will be necessary to credit these energies that fail through decay. those species that fail through decay, writes W. J. When it is remembered that the average life of an untreated the is seven years while the life of a treated tie is seventeen years, the importance and value of creosote is readily seen.

Your Furs are Safe

in our Vaults!

Why send them out of town when they can be stored just as well in Brantford?

Furs are so highly prized by everyone, it follows that great care must be taken to protect them from the ravages of moths. It is a fact that more furs are rained by these pests than by actual wear.

The cold, dry air system of storage is a positive safeguard against moths. Much work and worry can be avoided by simply telephoning ds at 619, and we will call for your furs and other winter apparel. You place your own valuation on each article, and we are responsible to you for that amount in case of loss by fire or moths. Our charge for storage and insurance is 3 per cent. of the value—a moderate charge when it is remembered that we carefully dust each article, and hang them in a vault that is intensely cold.

Nothing is packed or folded. Everything is kept on hangers, so that the most delicate article will not become creased or mussed, and will carry no odor of moth preventatives.
