THE GREAT PREPONDERENCE OF BRITISH MERCANTILE

date:-"The maritime supremacy of these islands is a subject which appeals not only to the imagination, but also to the material interests of all classes of our countrymen. At every point our manufacturers and our ocean-carrying trade are intimately connected, and it is a well recognized fact that we are dependent as a nation upon our great mercantile fleet

Enormous strides have been made since then by the British Mercantil Marine, particularly after the intro duction of steel as a constructive ma terial for ships, while during th same time many of the European na tions have been making strenuous ef forts to build up extensive and effi cient merchant marines of their own It is pertinent therefore, to endeavo to ascertain what is the present rela tive present position of the principal maritime countries at the present dat century ago. We have not taken into calculation the United States of America, for th reason that the tonnage owned i that country and registered for for eign trade, which, as indicated above was the next in importance 50 year in 1886 to a little over 1,000,000, an when compared with large figures. We shall obtain, perhaps, a moi striking impression of the actu share of the United Kingdom in the increase of the tonnage of the wor during the period under review observing that whereas the combine ng foreign maritime countries on amounts to about 71/2 million to
