LONDON COLLEGIATE INSTITUTE Mr. Little

for the Principality.

To the Editor of the ADVERTURE:

Kindly allow me to suggest to the Board of Education the advisability of appointing Mr. Little, the present classical master, to the principalship of the institute. His literary qualifications meet the requirements of the school law regulations for that position. He is an enthusiastic teacher, an excellent disciplinarian and organizer, and would command the good-will and co-operation of every member of the staf. His appointment would obviate the necessity of any further addition to the staff. According to the time table which I have before me, last term the staff had about twenty hours per week, or nearly the full time of one teacher, unoccupied. With a little readjustment of the table, for which there is ample room, a saving of at least ten hours more per week might be effected without detriment to any part of the work of the school. I am convinced that the interests of the school need not angler in the least by the proposed reduction in the staff, and that the principal would notwithstand ing have sufficient time at his disposal for general supervision. Indeed, I consider it a mistake to assume that a principal should spend the greater part of his time in supervising the work of the other teachers. The a mistake to assume that a principal should apend the greater part of his time in super-vising the work of the other teachers. The legal qualifications of those teachers and the test afforded by the results of their work is the best criterion of efficiency, and the less meddling on the part of a principal the better.

But to return to my suggestion, I might add that the appointment of a new man would be more or less of an experiment while the promotion of a promising member of the staff would not only be right in principle, but judicious in practice. Further, every department in the school is at present in charge of a specialist in accordance with the regulations governing collegiate institutes. If an outsider were appointed, his taking charge of a department, as he should, would disarrange the work of the whole staff. Again, with Mr. Little's knowledge of the circumstances and requirements of the school, it is questionable if an equally good, or even a better man, could handle the school to the same advantage.

Briefly, my arguments in favor of his appointment are the following:

1. Other things being equal, the principle of promotion is the proper one to pursue.

2. Mr. Little's past efficient services in the employ of the Board furnish a reasonable guarantee of his success in a position with the duties of which he is quite familiar, and in the discharge of which as first assistant he has already had more or less experience.

3. His appointment would insure harless experience.

3. His appointment would insure harmony in the management of the school, as he would unquestionably enter upon his duties with the sympathy and co-operation of both pupils and teachers.

of both pupils and teachers.

4. The appointment of a new man would necessitate a rearrangement of the departments and retard the work of the school in consequence.

5. Dispensing with any further addition to the staff would effect a saving of at least $1,200 per annum to the Board without detriment to the interests of the school.

Sick Headache, Foul Stomach, Billousness, will be avoided, as the food that is caten contributes its nourishing properties for the support of the natural waste of the body.

By way of apology for presuming to offer any suggestion in this matter, I may state that this is the first time that I have such that this is the first time that I have such that the such that any suggestion in this time that I have expressed an opinion on any of the questions which have been agitating educational circles in this city for the past few years, but on this occasion I thought that my knowledge of the internal management of the school and its affairs warranted me in giving public expression to what I deemed the best course to be followed in this matter in the interests of the institute. I assure you that I have no personal motivo in writing upon the subject, and indeed I am not sure but that I am taking undue liberty in suggesting Mr. Little's appointment, as I have not met or communicated with him this season, and I do not know what his feelings are with respect to the vacancy. I am yours truly,

The Reason Why.

"Why don't I work, madame? Because I am a philanthropist. Do you read the papers, ma'am?" She confessed that she did. "Then you have occasionally noted the bitter contests between labor and capital. I cannot be a capitalist, and I will not make the workman's lot—already too hard—harder still by entering the ranks against him. I am satisfied to bear the world's scorn because I know the purity of the principles that actuate me." He thanked her and looked doubtfully at the pie she gave him. "I may die of starvation or poison, madame," he continued, "but I will never assist in making labor cheaper by competition."
