EASING THE BURDENS OF THE LONELY

Admirable Work of the Home for Incurables.

How the Journey to the Inevitable End Is Lightened.

An Advertiser Writer Visits the Home and Learns Many Interesting Facts.

Eight years ago, the Women's Christian Association of this city, rented a small house on the Hamilton road, and with a single inmate started a Home for Incurables.

Today, in a large, airy, attractive house on Dundas street, east of Adelaide, more than twenty frail and worn-out bodies are housed and sheltered. It might at first thought be said that of all sad, human derelicts, these must surely be the saddest. Sick and helpless, some are a burden to their friends, and some have no friends. More than once it has come to the ears of this institution that-God be merciful! -the old homestead, where once there was room for all, has shrunk to such a degree that it could not contain a feeble old man or woman at the fireside corner any longer! Drifting on the lee-shore of a hospital we find them, at last, slowly—on, so slowly-going to pieces; and living in dread of the doctor's daily visit, and the inevitable verdict, "Incurable; we cannot help him."

It is when this sad state of affairs is reached that the Home for Incurables throws wide its doors, and, once received, the wayfarer need not start out again until he goes forth on his last, long journey. It might naturally be thought that those to whom the pathetic word, "Incurable," may be applied, would be uncheerful; but it is not so. Perhaps it is that, looking steadily towards a certain ending, they adjust their minds to their situation, and, by some law of eternal compensation, many small alleviations, like flowers by the dusty wayside, spring up to brighten and to cheer.

Lord Bacon, in one of his essays, speaks of Death as showing a face even of friendliness to those in dungeons. But there is little of that mood observable in the Home for Incurables. No doubt it is partly because the inmates have discounted the end, and partly because of the divine anodyne of cheerful sympathy, loving attention, and resignation to the will of Providence, which is a plant not of human

The worthy matron, to whom I spoke the great blessing of such a home, plied that in most cases it was felt be so; and that only for the first ew days does the new arrival suffer

THE DIARY OF AN INMATE. In illustration, I was permitted to see an extract from a diary left by one of the patients, which reads as "I arrived here on Tuesday the 9th, and I cannot describe the feeling on leaving home. I think it must be something like the agony of parting from friends at death. It was the emotion caused by going among strangers, and leaving all one has loved at home. But I find this feeling was largely exaggerated; everyone is very kind to me, and I have a nice, comfortable room. On Wednes-day afternoon an English Church lay reader held service, which I enjoyed very much, it being the first time I had attended service for two years." Perhaps 1 may be allowed to say here that the kindly lay reader alluded to above proved to be Mr. C. F.

the home was opened, Mr. Complin has held a song service for the in-mates; and as it happened the service was in progress on the afternoon of my visit. The quiet satisfaction the inmates seemed to derive from Mr. Complin's reading, and the hymns, led me to inquire of the matron whether their tastes ever ran in the direction of anything secular. "Yes," Mrs. Groshaw answered.

"They are very fond of an entertainment, something quite lively. It gives variety and lends passing brightness to their lives. Some young men from the Congregational Church came up here one evening to give an entertainment, one of them with his face black-ened. The fun was all wholesome and harmless, and the inmates have not got done talking about it yet."

This decided predilection for life, and interest in its small pleasures, came as a surprise to the reporter, who now ventured the not altogether original suggestion of a Christmas tree. The matron of the Home for Incurables is of a responsive personality, and her eyes sparkled, as she

"Charming! And I hope when Santa Claus gets round this year, the Home for Incurables will not be left out." Mrs. J. B. Groshaw, it may be added, in passing, for five years has made the institution seem as much like a home was possible; and where she could she has considered the individuality of each patient under her care.

NO RELENTLESS RED TAPE. "When an old lady makes up her mind that she wants a tasty herring for her supper, she is going to have it, if I can get it for her," laughed Mrs. droshaw, who does not believe in relentless red tape.
"Severity is what they dread most of all, in coming to us, she went on." But when they find we do not wish to take their liberty from them, they are The reporter was now shown all over the institution, and found it warm, clean and commodious throughout. One could not repress a feeling of thankfulness that the thought of providing such a harbor of refuge for the incurable had entered into the minds of kindly women.

The inmates are under the professional care of Dr. J. B. Campbell (who gives his services free), and all have a well-cared-for look. It is, of course, understood that anything in the nature of infectious or contagious disease does not come under the scope of a home for incurables. What the home seems to lack is a few bright pictures, plants or flowers, while reading matter is also very acceptable. One can only hope that now its wants are known the Home for Incurables will come in for its share of good things, which kind-hearted people are always willing to bestow.

MONUMENT TO DEWIT!

Germans Will Unveil One Next Sunday.

London Theaters May Be Free to the Public on Coronation Day-Turkey Pays Britain $80,000.

Berlin, Nov. 14. - Germany will indulge in a fervent demonstration of sympathy for the Boers next Sunday, when a commemorative statue to Gen. Dewet will be unveiled in the village of Schierstein, in the Rhine Province. The money for the memorial has been raised by subscriptions of 1 mark each, contributed by Germans who bear the guerrilla chieftain's given name of Christian. It takes the form of a heroic bronze bust mounted on a massive pedestal, approaching which is the ligure of a stalwart young German, cap in hand, who is about to decorate the bust of the Dutch cavalryman with a laurel wreath. At the base of the pedestal reclines a monster typifying the horrors of war.

The monument, which was designed by Prof. Pfretzschner, of Berlin, is inscribed: "In Pride and Honor, to Our Valiant Brother in Blood, Captain in the East Prussian Army." Accompanying this inscription is the followsentiment: "May the intrepid Dethe Blucher of the Boers, achieve what every man whose heart is in the right spot hopes for - a free and eternal Boer Empire."

THE GALE GOES ON. The heavy gale all over the United Kingdom continues. Telegraphic communication with Scotland has been cut off completely.

The wind is accompanied by a deluge of warm rain in the western and midland counties, and with cold rain and snow in the northern and eastern counties. There have been serious floods in Ireland, where it has rained incessantly for 40 hours. The rivers are swollen, and many towns have been inundated. In some cases furniture is floating in the streams. The poor are suffering greatly. Some washouts have occurred on the railways. The dam at Lake Tanderagee, on the Duke of Manchester's estate, has broken and caused considerable destruction. One man was killed. Part of Belfast is severely flooded. The water in the streets has prevented the opening of the principal theater of the city. There have been many street accidents.

It is estimated that 216 lives have been lost on the British coasts since the gale began.

ROUND THE WORLD TO WIN A WAGER

Remarkable Journey of a Young Treveler From New South Wales.

This city is being visited by a lad named Emery, who, considering his age, has had such a variety of experience as to entitle him to be ranked with the aged. Born 24 years ago in New South Wales, young Emery spent his earlier years with his parents, leaving home and school at the of 12 for a ramble through the country. He subsequently met with success varied by ill-fortune. By his efforts he managed to accumulate which he afterwards lost

In order to help him his friends have guaranteed £3,000 to accomplish the following task, namely, to leave Australia without a shilling, and work his way to England; to support himself in London for six months, in Paris for three, Ireland three, and in America one year, and return to Australia $10,-000 richer within 21/2 years, and lastly, to wear red and green plush clothes, and to keep a diary of all that occurs from start to finish.

On Jan. 14, 1900, according to his statement, he left Albany, Western Australia, as a stoker in the Cuzed steamer, which arrived at Tilbury docks on Feb. 19, and arrived in London the same day wearing red and green plush clothes, with 40 cents in his pocket, which was spent the same night on bed and food. He starved two days before receiving any help from the London newspapers, then received $50 for an article from Arthur C. Pearson, of the Daily Express. Success followed. He lectured for three months London, spent the other three months in writing up places of historical interest, and states that he made his $10,000 the first three months Then made a wager of in London. $1,000 that he would leave London without a cent and walk

After remaining seven days at Gen. Hardy's place, with the Australian and Canadian soldiers, he crossed over to Calais. He lectured one night at the Casino, and made enough money to take him to Paris next day, where he remained for three months, obtaining a commission on the Western Australian exhibit. Emery states that he had an interview with the King of Belgium, Prince George of Greece, and Kruger. He left Paris at the end of three months and marched through England to Scotland, where he was received by the Burns Club, of Glasgow. He subs quently visited Ayr for the purpose of seeing Burns' cottage, and states that he secured a piece of Burns' Crossed over to Londonderry, Ireland, where he lectured three months; thence sailed to Halifax, Canada, on the 4th of last April. Letters to the Editor.

THE McCLARY ASSESSMENT. To the Editor of The Advertiser:

We observe by a number of references in the press to our application to the city council for a fixed assessment, that it is referred to as an "exemption." We understand that an 'exemption" means reduced taxation, which implies a favor at the expense of other taxpayers. We have never asked nor received a favor from the city council, granted as a favor. In appearing before the city council, it is a matter of business with us. We make a proposition of one price and one limit. We are ready to accept the verdict of the city's representatives. They are selected for the purpose of guarding the city's interests. They are not asked to grant us a favor; they are not asked nor expected to sacrifice the people's interests in the smallest degree. If they were, we are quite sure the applicant would be disappointed. We have felt a delicacy in putting the proposition and liable results in too plain language, fearing that it might appear offensive, and be misunderstood and interpreted as a threat. We think it only fair for ourselves and just to the city that we should place the matter before them in as brief and practical a manner as guarding the city's interests. They are not asked to grant us a favor; in as brief and practical a manner as possible. We asked a limitation assessment of one hundred and fifty thousand ($150,000) dollars. Why do we ask this? As set forth in our apsuch companies is beyond all reasonable limits on personal property. How does it compare with other countries? At our present rate of assessment, it is 221/2 times greater than in the Province of Quebec, and 221/2 times greater than in New York state under the state law. It is about 10 times as great as the war tax in England. representatives, We won't allow our capital to remain here subject to this

We said to the city, through their excessive and unreasonable tax, especially as we are about to largely increase our capital. What will we do? What under the circumstances would be considered practical and reasonable by a thoughtful business man, especially when he is a shareholder of the company? What the shareholders intend to do, and what they deem is the only practical thing that they can legitimately do, under forced condi-tions, is to remove our head office to the Province of Quebec. In this case the present property here and capital employed in manufacturing, if it belonged to the company, would still be assessable. To place ourselves on a practical and legitimate footing, we see no other course, failing in our ef-forts to dispose of the plant for say eighty thousand ($80,000) dollars, than to form a local company, and dispose of the plant to them. This local company would be employed to manufacture goods and to distribute, according to instructions, for the McClary tate. Why is the personal property for carrying on the business not assessed? The company would be working on credit. How would it affect the city's assessment? The writer thinks he is warranted in saying the city would find $50,000 less personal property than we named in our limit, and when the foundry comes to be removed (or partly removed) from the center of our congested premises, the assessor would find a further reduction, necessarily reducing the assessment. How would it affect the future development and extension of our business in or adjoining the city? When we appeared the city council, we appeared in the interests of our company. also appeared as citizens. We felt that if we took independent action, without laying the conditions before the city's representatives, we would not have done our duty as citizens. We desire, and have always acted, and trust we will continue to act, in the interests of the city, so long as it does not conflict with the interests of our company. If our company's interests conflict with the interests of the city, we say to your representatives to protect the city, and if we fail to protect the interests of our company, it shall not be considered that it was for lack of

This matter may turn to be a good illustration (if the writer is warranted in saying so) of the senseless act, as applied to personal property in this province. If a manufacturer employs labor and gives support through his works to the householder's tenant, and the assessor puts in an appearance and assesses the dwelling house and lands at its full value, and assesses the factory and grounds for its full value, we think that there would be very narrow grounds for the householder to "howl" at the manufacturer that gives increasvalue to his premises, and furnishes him with a paying tenant.

We recognize but two legitimate methods as a basis of extensive worksfixed assessment, or work on credit. We authorize an amendment to our request for legislation, namely, that it e procured at the expense of the Mc-Clary Manufacturing Company. Dear Mrs. Roemmele,-Your many friends in the North Ekfrid Church have met together tonight to express their high appreciation of your services as an active member of the congregation. At the very commencement of the movement to start the mission, your husband and yourself, with a few others, were particularly zealous in efforts to establish preaching of the Word in the district of North Ekfrid, and when the num-bers were few, fewer still to help, the cause weak, and much temptation to be discouraged, you made yourself useful, both in Sabbath school and church in every way within your power. Your friends recognize how perseveringly you have kept up your interest in the work, holding on to the present time, and in token of their appreciation, they beg of you to accept this sofa, not as a reward—for we have been taught to look away from man to him who will render to everyone according to his deeds for our final reward-but simply as a light assurance that your work of the past has not been forgotten, that yourself and husband may be spared together, and that yourselves and all the members and adherents of the little church may continue banded together to work for the Master, and come at last to receive his glorious reward, is the earnest prayer and hope of your sincere friends.
