beets and going on with the various pro desses. True, we might make beet sugars notwithstanding; but it would be at a heavy expense for store room and fuel. In France and Germany all the heaviest part of the work is done in the open air, and at a comparatively light expense. A Mon-treal business man, who knows whereof he speaks, tells this story : Down in that district there was a man who gave beet sugar making a fair trial, and lost heavily by the experiment. Having removed to Southern California, it occurred to him that the mild winter climate of that region that the mild winter climate of that region was just what was wanted for the business by which he had lost money in Canada. He tried it, made a perfect success of it, and is now a large producer of beet sugar in the golden state.

Canada will make no attempt to produce sugar from her own soil, except what her own native maple tree may afford, with perhaps a little sorghum syrup thrown in. She will continue to supply herself with cane sugar from hot countries, but she will at the same time make no bargain with aLybody that woald put her sugar-refining industry in peril. Thanks to the N. P. that industry has now become a very important one, giving large employment to Canadian capital, labor, railways and ship ping, all which employment would disappear were we to let the sugar-refining trade go down. No such suicidal counsels would now be listened to, from any quarter; and it is not worth anybody's while to tender them. But, carrying out the principles of protection thorougly, all no trouble at all. grades of sugar fit only for refining should be admitted free, just as we do with raw cotton, tes and coffee. The sound protectionist doctrine is that on tropical and semi-tropical produce-articles which cannot be grown in this country-no duties whatever should be levied.

It should still be practicable, however, to favor the West Indies above all other sugar producing countries, while retaining our own protective system intact. The details of an arrangement of this character need not frighten us, shou'd the principle ica by Columbas. In this case, we pre he accepted.
