There is nothing in the proclamation of His Excellency which compels men to cease from their labor on Thanksgiving day; it merely requests them to do so, and to turn their thoughts for one day to the great source from whence come all the blessings we enjoy.

And surely there are none among us who ought not to be willing to give up some time to the great source from whence come all the blessings we enjoy, and to think that we ourselves have created the conditions which we are surrounded. To how great an extent this is wrong will at once be realized by any one who gives the subject the consideration. And it is that we might have some time to think of these things that Thanksgiving Day has been instituted.
