REPORTER'S FOLIO.

The Intercollegiate debate between the Congregational and Presbyterian Colleges on the one hand, and the Wesleyan and Diocesan on the other, was held on the evening of the 14th, in the new Assembly Hall of the Diocesan College.

The public interest in the subject was shown by the large and thoroughly appreciative audience which came to encourage the speakers by their presence. The judges for the evening were Ven. Archdeacon Mills, D.D., Dean Walton, B.A., LL.B., and Prof. C. Colby, Ph.D. Prof. Charles Moyses, of McGill University, occupied the chair, and discharged the duties of the position in a way that was beyond criticism. In his opening remarks, he expressed his appreciation of the honor conferred upon him in representing McGill on such an occasion as a debate between the Theological Colleges affiliated with the University ; and although the visitors had come to see a battle, yet, they were reminded, the combatants considered themselves as brethren. (Applause.) The chairman then introduced the programme by calling upon Mr. Percy Moore, of the Diocesan College, to favor the audience with a solo, in which he upheld his reputation in an able manner. Following him, Mr. Masson, of the Wesleyan College gave an interesting reading.
