What pleases me is explicitness in everything. I never want to be left in doubt when it is just as easy to have myself positively assured. Now there is an editor in Ayr who suits me exactly in this regard. I have just come across one of his back numbers in which he informs an anxious public about "a double-scutt match for a stake of $1,000, between Hanlan and Lee in one boat and Ross and Hamm in the other." This is full and complete. Your imagination, you see, doesn't have to run riot in the endeavor to infer that in this particular double-scutt race two of the oarsmen were in one boat and two in the other. Hang folks who never tell you a story straight! Confound people who slump about what they've got to say!
