THE QUEEN GOES WEST

After a tumultuous welcome in Chicago, followed by a quiet day cruising on Lake Michigan, Her Majesty the Queen arrived at noon on July 8 at Sault Ste. Marie, situated on the St. Mary's River which links Lake Huron with Lake Superior. Now a thriving port and industrial centre, this spot was once a favourite gathering-place for Indians and later a centre for French explorers and fur-traders.

Her Majesty and Prince Philip drove to Bellevue Park where children were assembled, after which they were entertained at a civic luncheon. Later a tour was made of the Algoma Steel Mills and at mid-afternoon the Royal party re-embarked on the Britannia for the Lakehead.

Port Arthur and Fort William, the twin cities at the head of Lake Superior, and the western terminus of the St. Lawrence Seaway, were reached on Thursday, July 9. The Queen and Prince Philip drove through the two cities where they visited hospitals and again greeted gatherings of children. Early in the afternoon the Royal party left by air for Calgary, Alberta.

The Queen and His Royal Highness arrived in this prairie city with the stampede in full swing and were met by citizens in the regalia of the festival. They drove to the Stampede Grounds where they visited the Indian village and watched a chuckwagon race from the grandstand. The rest of the evening was spent in the barbecue area after which the Royal party left by train for Banff.

July 10 was spent in Canada's magnificent Rocky mountains. The first stop was at Banff. Here the Queen and Prince Philip visited the Canadian Army Cadet National Camp and the Banff School of Fine Arts, where they saw the varied activities.

The Royal party then drove to Lake Louise, famous for its exquisite turquoise colour, emphasized by the glacier in the background and the fir-clad mountain slopes on either side. A stop for lunch was made at the Chateau Lake Louise. From Field the journey was continued by train with pauses at several places.

The first stop on Saturday morning July 11 was at Vernon from where the Queen and her party went on to Kamloops. This town derives its name from an Indian word which means meeting of the waters - the North and South Thompson Rivers. From here the Queen and Prince Philip went by air to a remote fishing club at Pennask Lake where they remained until Tuesday morning, July 14.

The Royal train left Kamloops shortly after noon on Tuesday and made brief stops at various places, arriving in the evening at Chilliwack.
