National Ideals Which Must Be Personal

British ideals of national honor and lantic declare that they either permanhood in the instructions given to sonally witnessed, or were informed their respective armies. We do not on entirely credible authority, that forget either that German, and even train loads of the soldiers of the czar understand that foreclosure in cases other continental writers, have impeached the English for cultivating the dered past from Aberdeen, Leith and code of Mr. Pecksniff. Few nations are Hull, bound for points of embarkation The Kaiser's Intention Has Failed But there are some things which the British could scarcely be capable of. and Sir Edward Grey and Mr. Asquith and Lord Kitchener have indicated a few of them. Perhaps Lord Kitchener's advice to the troops on their departure to France is as fine an example of what distinguishes the British from the

and it has been a victorious policy, altho the kaiser lost the moral. No great stress has been laid upon the fact, but it should have made a deep impression upon many who noted it, that the British have refused to follow the example of Germany in laying mines in neutral waters. Germany refused to sign The Hague in cash results from the support of the agreement which bound the parties to it not to resort to this barbarous method of warfare. Britain would, therefore, have been free to adopt these weapons in attacking Germany. But she declined. It was not playing

The Question of Moratorium

Two of our provincial legislatures are in session to discuss, among other things, the moratorium. The British Columbia papers are urging a similar meeting for that province. In Ontario people are talking both for and against it. A suggestion will likely be made to the government in a day or two by the Ontario Municipal Association, recently formed.

What seems to be the safest way out is that any moratorium passed by any legislature be limited in its extent, and in the first proclamation applied to mortgages only; and, even in these, that whether it should apply or should not apply, in any individual case, be left to a judge, or perhaps what might be better, to a moratorium commission of one business man and two judges. This commission would not sit with the formality of a court, but would have quick action and be able to tell in a few minutes whether the circumstances warranted deferment of payment or not. If the OnTHE GERMAN WAR DOG
