

STRAY LEAVES

By HERBERT PAUL, M.P.

Crown 8vo. 5s. net. Second Edition.

PRESS OPINIONS

Times.—"Mr. Paul . . . quotes the country squire who said, 'There are some books which it is a positive pleasure to read.' We ourselves put Mr. Paul's box of essays in this class. The present volume, 'Stray Leaves,' is as rich in entertaining grailles as its predecessor, 'Men and Letters.'"

Daily Graphic.—"We have seldom met with so brilliant a book of essays as 'Stray Leaves.'"

Mr. JAMES DOUGLAS in the Star.—"Mr. Herbert Paul's essays are cases in the desert of literature through which the sand critic wanders."

Sunday News.—"Undoubtedly clever and entertaining . . . profoundly shrewd and full of insight."

Pall Mall Gazette.—"This clever and interesting book."

Manchester Guardian.—"A style full of wit and epigram, and sparkling with points."

MEN AND LETTERS

By HERBERT PAUL, M.P.

Crown 8vo. 5s. net. Fourth Edition.

Daily News.—"Mr. Herbert Paul has done scholars and the reading world in general a high service in publishing this collection of his essays. . . . To write an essay that shall tickle the understanding, as a sauce by Brillat Savarin must have tickled the palate, is a task attempted by many and accomplished by few. Among these few Mr. Paul must be ranked. . . . It must be read as a whole by all who appreciate urbanity, humour, and a style which glitters like the point of a rapier wielded by a master of the fence."

Punch.—"A delightful book of essays. Mr. Paul's book is as light and his style as brilliant as his reading is wide, and his memory accurate. His fund of good stories is inexhaustible, and his urbanity never fails. On the whole, this book is one of the very best examples of literature on literature and life."

Star.—"A volume of critical essays to lose sleep over. . . . There are thirteen essays in this fascinating book, and as one reads each seems better than the other. . . . I commend this delightful book to all lovers of good literature."

Sphere.—"Excellent. . . . Thirteen entertaining essays, therefore a pleasure to read."

Manchester Guardian.—"Writing papers. They proclaim themselves to be the work of a scholar who has taken con amore to journalism, and of a journalist who still cherishes and revels in his scholarship."

Guardian.—"A delightful book. Every one who cares for good literature and good talk should buy at once."
