THAT scientific expedition round the world may, perhaps, be able to tell us when it returns, why a man takes off his boots first when undressing, while a woman begins at her hairpins.

SHE—"What is this science of palmistry I hear so much about?" He—"The art of telling fortunes by the hand." She—"Can you tell my fortune by my hand?" He—"No; but if I had your hand I could tell my own fortune." He got it.

"How styles have changed since I was a girl," said an old lady. "When I was young we used to wear our dresses up to the neck, and gloves with only one button. Now they wear gloves up to the neck, and only one button on the dress."

PROVIDENCE stands by the man who stands by himself. He whose money is wisely spent in deeds of charity, kindness and helpfulness gets it all back with compound interest.

"So you have got a step-mother?" she said to the little girl of seven. "Yes." "Well, I feel sorry for you." "Oh, you needn't do that!" replied the little one. "Please feel sorry for pa."

"I WANT your mother to let my affairs alone," said Brown to Mrs. B. "I won't have any more of her dictation." "You're always finding fault with mother," retorted Mrs. B. "I'll have you understand, Mr. Brown, that my mother is an angel." "I wish she was," groaned Brown.
