Critics at New York termed "Via Wireless" a triumph in motion picture photography, and their view was upheld by last night's audience.

WM. ANDREWS IS DROWNED IN HARBOR

Engineer of Tug Victoria Falls Overboard

LIKELY SLIPPED ON ICE

Several Efforts at Rescue But None of Avail as Unfortunate Man Soon Sank -- Leaves Wife and Children

William Andrews, engineer of the tug Victoria, of the Norton Griffiths Company fleet, was drowned in the harbor this morning. Just how the accident happened is not known, but it is thought that he slipped on ice at the after portion of the boat and, losing his balance, fell overboard.

About half past eight o'clock, as the tug was proceeding down the harbor with a hoisting scow in tow en route to Courtenay Bay, Captain J. Smith heard cries for help. Looking out of the wheelhouse he saw a man struggling in the water a short distance in the rear of his boat. He signalled the engine room for a reverse of engines, but as there was no one there, the call was unheeded. Crying out to Cook Archer Thurber, to take charge of the engine, the captain quickly cast off his tow and, turning the tug, tried to reach the spot where he had last seen the struggling man. He arrived too late, however, and despite his alertness in watching for sign of his reappearance, failed to again see the unfortunate man.

W. J. Quinn, superintendent of dredges for the Norton Griffiths Dredging Company, while waiting on the wharf at Reed's Point for one of his boats to come along, heard a cry for help and soon discerned a man struggling in the water some 300 yards away. He rushed to a motor boat, which was tied to the wharf, and starting the engine, headed for the place where he had last seen the unfortunate man. In the meantime a row boat containing members of the crew of the pilot boat Howard E. Troop was heading for the same spot, but they were unable to render any assistance, as the man apparently could not swim and had kept himself afloat for only a few minutes by frantically beating his arms in the water. They recovered his hat.

Mr. Andrews was in the employ of the Norton Griffiths Dredging Company for some time and was a good, steady, reliable workman. He was a general favorite with his fellow employees, and his tragic death cast a gloom over the entire staff. He was about thirty-five years of age and is survived by his wife and several children. It is understood that he is a resident of St. Andrews, and while in this city lived on board the tug.

Mr. Quinn soon had men grappling for the body and offered a reward of $25 to the one who would recover it.

LETTER FROM DRIVER CUMMINGS

In a letter to his mother, Mrs. D. Cummings of 32 Forest street, Driver William D. Cummings tells of his life at the front. He was in good health and seemed to be enjoying himself. He says: "We have a good stove in our bivouac and we so to bed nice and warm. We have made bunk beds to sleep in, and I am just as comfortable as anyone in the section. We are getting pretty good grub now."
 He speaks of receiving a sweater coat which he has found very useful, and thanks his mother for a box of supplies which, he says, always comes handy. The men are buying rubber boots, and he asks for thick socks to wear with them and also waterproof mittens if they can be secured.
