Now and then the "Hamatsa" would crouch down on the ground. Th attendants would yell at him and would stand up and make attempts to break away. After a time the twelve men walked around outside of the "Hamatsa" while one lusty brave encircled the fire, apparently to keep the seemingly demented man from jumping on the blaze. This went on for some time. Then the "Hamatsa" fell on the ground and was covered with a blanket held around the sides and ends by the twelve Indians. Apparently the "Hamatsa" was exhausted.

The noises ceased, and everything remained quiet until a masked man entered the building carrying a long pole, to which was attached an old blanket. The masked man walked to the bonfire, after making four turns round the hall. He placed the blanket on the fire and left it there until it started to burn and emit a dense smoke. He then withdrew it and waved it over his head four times, uttering gutteral sounds as he did so. He then walked round the fire four times, still waving the blanket. Then he stooped near the fallen "Hamatsa" and waved the blanket over the latter.

The "Hamatsa" gave an unearthly yell, crawled from under the blanket, broke away from his captors, and ran to the head chief. The chief stood up and the "Hamatsa" fell weeping on his shoulder. The head chief consoled him, patting his head. The twelve braves then marched over to the "Hamatsa," placed the crown of cedar on his head, sprinkled him with down, encircled his neck with the cedar bark wreath, and of these not leaving that much clear covered his body with the button-covered space will be prosecuted. Silverware Stolen From Cook Residence Was Found Yesterday.

In December, 1900, the residence of Mrs. Cook, Cadboro Bay road, was entered during the absence of the occu pants, and a considerable quantity of silverware and a valise were stolen. This was about the time of the operations of Fred Plump, and the police suspected him of having included the Cook home in his unlawful itinerary. They were un able to connect him with this robbery, however, as they could not locate any

On Sunday afternoon a young lad named Oliver was playing off Craigflower road not far from the Victoria of a fork protruding from a valise. Examination disclosed the presence of quite a lot of silver, and the police were communicated with. On investigation they found that it was the plunder stolen from the Cook residence more than three years ago. Some of the articles are in first class condition, but rust had played
