read this :--

Many men feel that it is necessary to accumulate a considerable sum before purchasing investment securities. But while this sum is accumulating many other unforced uses develop, and the desired sum is a long time being reached.

The better plan is to invest small sums as you save them. Thus your investment holdings and dividends are steadily being increased, and your savings have not slipped away anaccounted for.

THE WATER MILL.

Lister se the water mill.
Through the live-long say.
How the clanking of the wheels
Wears the hours a way!
Languidly the Autums whad
Stirn the green wood baves;
From the fields the respensing,
Rinding up the shee we;
And a proverb haunts my mind,
As a spell is east:
The mill will never gaind
With the water that has pussed

With the water that has pussed
Take the lesson to three.
Living heart and true:
Golden years are fleeling by,
Youth is passing tou.
Learn to make the read at life,
Lose no happy day;
Time will never bring the shack
Chances swept away.
Leave no tender word usuald,
Love while life shall hat—
'The mill will never grand.
With the water that is passed.'

With the water that is passed."
Work while yet the daylight filines, Man of strength and will Never does the streamist glide
Useless by the mill.
Wait not till's to-morning's sun
Beams upon the way;
All that thou canst call thine own
Lies in thy to-day.
Power, intellect and health
May not, cannot last;
"The mill sell neven did
With the water than heap

With the water that has passed."

Oh, the wasted hours of life
That have drifted bu;
Oh, the good we might have doise,
Lout without a sigh!
Love that we might note have asved
By a single word;

"You needn't falk, Jim. I'll talk for myself. Where is she?"

"She'll be comin' on soon. You can "She'll be comin' one soon. You can wait around out here with me. I'll let you know in time." He led the way through a narrow passage between the wagon. BILLS SECOND READING. Hon, Mr. Armstrong, Chairman of the Select Committee on Bills, report-through a narrow passage between the wagons.

Jim and Douglas had barely left the let when Deacon Elverson's small, round head slipped cautiously around the corner of the dressing tent. The little deacon glaneed exultantly about him. He was monarch of all he survayed. It was very thrilling to stand here on this forbidden ground smelling the sawdust, gazing at the big red wagons, sindying the unprotected circus properties and listening to the lightening tempo of the band.

"Did you see him?" shouted Strong, who had followed closely upon Elverson's heels. to borrow money to meet maturing debentures;

A Bill entitled, an Act to amend Chapter 198, Acts of 1901, entitled, an Act to Incorporate the Berwick Cemetery Company,

Also, with amendments;

A Bill entitled, an Act to amend Chapter 133, of the Act of 1911, entitled, an Act to incorporate the Lunenburg Electric Railway Company, Limited;

A Bill entitled, an Act to enable the Town of Digby to borrow money for the construction of permanent side walks.

The little deacon started. Strong was certainly a disturbing factor at times.

"Yes, 1—I saw him."

"He he didn't see her."
"What did he do?" Strong was be "He-he-didn't see her."

"What did he do?" Strong was beside himself with impatience.

"He-be just taiked to the hig us and went out that way." Enverses needed toward the wagons.

"I guess he ain't gune far," succred Strong. "He come over to this lot so see her, and he sin't goin to give up till he does it. Fou wait here. I'd take a look round." He went quickly.
In the direction of the wagons.

Eliverson needed no second invitation to wait. He was congratulating himself upon his good fortune when he sill but collided with a flying appartition, vanishing in the direction of the maintent. Sophisticated eyes would have seen only a rather stont ecrobat clad in olisk tichts, but Eliverson was not sophisticated, and he testered after the fifting angel, even unto the forbidden
portats of the big top.

He was peopling through the curtains which had fallen behind, her and was getting his first glimpse of the great awdust world beyond when one of the clewus dashed from the dressing tent on his way to the rine.

A Bill entitled, an Act respecting an annuity to George L. Sinclair;
A Bill entitled, an Act to amend Chapter 73, Revised Statutes, 1900, The Assessment Act.
A Bill entitled, an Act to amend Chapter 162, Revised Statutes of Nova-Scotia, Of Investment of Trust Funds in certain Loan Companies;
A Bill entitled, an Act to amend Chapter 2, Acts of 1911, The Education Act; sawdust world beyond when one of the clowns dashed from the dressing tent on his way to the ring.

The clown was lata. He saw the limp coattails of the descon, who was three-quarters in the tent. Here wall a chase to make a funny entrance. He grabbed the unsuspecting little man from the reak. The terrified descon struck out blindly in all directions, his black arms and legs moving like a centiped's, but the clown held him firmly by the back and thrust him headforement into the tent.

Strong returned almost immediately from his unsuccessful search for the pattor. He looked about the let. for Act;
A Bill entitled, an Act to amend

Singo was waiting, "and bring Barbarian. "I'm not going to nide it. Bloise is going to ride in my place."

This was the second time today that Bingo had been led away without going into the ring. Something in his big, wondering eyes made Polly follow him and apologize. He was very proud, was Bingo, and very conactentious. He felt uneasy when he saw the other horses going to their work without him.

"Never mind, Bingo," she said, patting his great, arched neck; "we'll show 'en tomorrow." He rubbed his satiny nose against her check, "We'll make them sit up again. Barker says our act's no good—that I've let down. But it's not your fault, Bingo. I've not been fair to you. I'll give you a chance tomorrow. You wait. He'll never say it ngain, Bingo, never again?"

Polly had nothing more to do tonight except to get into her street clothes. The wagons would soon be moving away. For a moment she glanced at the dark church steeple; then she turned to go inside the tent. A deep, familiar voice stopped her. "Polly"

She turned quickly. She-could not answer. Douglas came toward her.

ly." She hardly knew what she was saying.
"What bargain?" demanded Douglas, "She told me that you and her wasn't ever goin' to see each other ag'm?" roared Strong, "If I'd knowed she was goin' to keep on with this kind of thing you wouldn't have got off so easy."

"So that's str" cried Douglas. It was all clear to kin now. He executed "So that's sti" cried Doegles. It was all clear to him now. He recalled everything — her hystorical behavior, her langues, hes team. "It was you who drove that child back to this." He geneed at Polly. The narrow shoulders were best forward. The nervous little fingers were classing and unclasping each other. Never before had she seemed so small and helpless. "Oh, please, Mr. John, please don't make him any worse?"

"Why didn't you tell me?" he demanded.
"It would have done no good," she answer. Doughs came toward her.

He gazed at her in amazement. She drew her cape about her alightly cladfigure. She seemed older to him, more unapproachable with her hair heaped high and sparkling with jewels. She found strength at last to open her lips, but still no sound came from them. She and the pastor looked at each other strangely, like spirits new-ly met from far apart worlds. She.

"Has Jim been talking to you?"
"Yes, but I didn't let him stop me, for you told me the day you left that you'd never change—toward me. Have you, Polly?" He studied her anxiously "Why, no, of course not," she said evasively. evasively. "And you'll be quite frank when lask you something?"

"Yes, of course." She was growing more and more uneasy. She glanced about for a way of esdape.

"Why did you leave me as you did?"

"I told you then." She tried to cross toward the dressing tent.

He seized her small wrists and forced her to look at him.
