CHATHAM, NOVEMBER 6, 1884.

The Trustful Dunks Man.
(New York Times.)
The less croak right as he poured a gill of brandy from a gilded decanter into a crystal chalice that rested upon a little table in the Hoffman House. "Yes," he said, "I was played for a sucker once, but I hate to tell about it. You ought not to ask a man to give himself away.
Well, since you insist, I'll try to hide the pain it gives me and tell you a tale that will make you weep for the perfidy of mankind. A mean trick, was it? Well, I should rather say it was. It was so mean that I don't think I'd have had the heart to do it myself.
"It was like this. I was coming down Broadway one evening in the Fall, about two years ago, when I was engaged in leading out-of-door gentlemen against Bunko. That don't pay now. The newspapers have exposed the thing so often that the worst yahoos from Michigan knows the game, and as soon as you say anything
