A PECULIAR WILL CASE:

The rise of James McCurdy, a young attenty in New York city, was attended with a number of peculiar circumstances of which the public in general were ignorant. His brilliant work in the celebrated Morris wa Morris will case won for him a measure of fame shatwould mean much to any young main in the legal profession. The case was a hard-fought one, involving much labor on the part of the attorneys, especially for the young attorney who sought to break the will whereby James E. Morris had left his entire estate to his scapograce fosterson, George M. Morris, who had disinherited his daughter Edith, who, in the eyes of the world, had ever been her father's favorite. McCurdy had known Edith for many years and, while they had never been setually betrothed, their names were more or less associated. The young lawyer himself was wealthy, so the match was deemed a fitting one and Edith did not seem syerse to his attentions. The news that she had been disinherited was received by the world with surprise. The estate was large one and the last act of her tesher was inexplicable. No one was more mystified than James McCurdy. "Of course I don't care myself that your money is gone, Edith," he said, "for I have enough for both of us. But it does seem strangs that that soon."
"Out seall names, Jim," replied Edith, andly. "It won't do any good. I never thought how it would seem to be left dependent, but I dare say I will get on somehow. I can teach music, or become a companion, or paint chinar, or...."
"You shall do nothing of the kind," he retorted hotly. "You will marry me and have everything you want. Still I do not once to see that fellow who was never a brother to you...and you know what a life he led your father—take what is your just due."

"I don't want to marry yoe, Jim, and have swan archines."

"Twent is a contest the will."

"Never! I could never contest the will of my father."

"I don't believe it was his will."

"What, Jim?"

"The upshot of the matter was that the will was contested. McCurdy found it up-hill work collecting evidence. Nothing that he could learn shook his conviction that the father was not out of his mind when he made the will. He bend all his energies toward showing that the will was a forged document, but found that he made little headway in the task. The foeter son had a friend, Clarence Woodruff, a dissipated young man, and somehow the attorney could not avoid associating his with the forged document. He had Woodruff watched, but in spite of his seal nothing came of the closest sorting of the young man's actions. Day after day he worried over the case, until finally he was almost in despair. Edith alone was anim and indifferent. But now McCurdy had his professional reputation at stake, and he clung to the preliminary work on the case with dogged tenacity, although baffied at every step. One day, while pondaring over the matter at his cinb, his attention was arrested by a familiar voice.

"Hello, Jim!"

"Isack, old boy!"

The two men clasped hands and were soon lunching together and conversing with much animation.

"By the way, Jack," said McCurdy, remembering a fad of his old friend. "are you anything in hypnotists lately?"

"I should think I was. I have become quite a celebrity in an amakeur way on the other side of the water—belong to two condenses of the side of the small aum of 150 francs. It was a fine linen shirt, the authenticty was a fine linen shirt, the authenticty of the radius and of the old friend. "are you anything in hypnotists lately?"

With that Jim related all the perplexi-ties of the case in hand and the other lis-tened with marked attention. For several hours they conversed and at the end of that time came to some conclusion. "Pooh! I don't believe it will work," Jack?"

He is the man whom you suspect forg-

"No; the other side are going to call him. He was well acquainted with Edith's father, and I believe claims to have been present when the will was drawn."
"You must point out Woodruff to me?"
"Yery well."
As they left the club of the

"Why did you say he did?"
"Because George Morris gave me $10,000 to testify in this case."
"It's a lie!" abouted that person.
"Your honor," said Jim coldly, "I protest against any interruption. This is their witness, your honor, and I assert that I am following a legitimate line of questions. I give your honor my word that we have not tampered with this witness. If there has been any wrong-doing, I protest that it was not on our side."
"You may proceed," said the court.
"Now, Mr. Woodraff, is it not a fact that Mr. Morris did not disinherit his daughter?"

"Is it not a fact that in the true will he left her everything?"
"It is." Here George whispered to his attorney:
"That hound has sold us out."
"Is it not true that you manufactured a will to suit your purposes?"
"It is."

"It is."
This was a conspiracy between you and George Morris to defraud an innocent girl?"

"It was."
"Where is the true will?"
"In George Morris' possession,"
"Where has he concealed it?"
"In his trunk in his room."
Here ensued a scene of confusion, George sprang to his feet with the intention of making an assault upon the witness. Officers were sent to the room and found the will.

eers were sent to the room and found the will.

It was a peculiar ending to a peculiar case, but whenever Jack in these days calls upon Jim and Edith and sees how happy, they are in their married life he does not regret the part he took in the case, although he did hypnotize the principal witness for the other side.

Z MISS WILLARD'S FIRST APPEAL A Very Presty Story of the Temperance Worker's Career.

A relic of Napoleon I was recently disposed of in the Rue Drouct auction rooms for the small sum of 150 france. It was a fine linen shirt, the authenticity of which is established by legal documents. After the death of Napoleon at St. Helicens it was brought to France by Marshal Bertrand, one of the Emperor's companions in captivity. ONLY TO-DAY, said.

"I understand," he replied, nodding his head in assent to her wishes. He told her his name was Jean Duret, and by and by she called him Jean, and he called her Lurine. He never haunted the Phasmacie now, but waited for her at the corner, and one Sunday he took her for a little excursion on the river, which she enjoyed exceedingly. Thus time went on, and Lurine was very happy. The statue smiled its ceedingly. Thus time went on, and Lurine was very happy. The statue smiled its enigmatical smile, though, when the sky was overcast, there seemed to her a subtle warning in the smile. Perhaps it was because they had quarreled the night before. Jean had seemed to her harsh and unforgiving. He had asked her if she could not bring him some things from the Pharmacie, and gave her a list of three chemicals, the names of which he had written on a paper.

"Why, bless you, if I got so little as that I would take something from the shelves every day and sell it."
The girl looked at him in amazement, The girl looked at him in amazement, and he, angry at her, turned upon his heel and left her. She leaned her arms upon the parapet of the bridge, and looked down into the dark water. The river always fascinated her at night, and she often pansed to look at it when crossing the bridge, shuddering as she did so. She eried a little as she thought of his abrupt departure, and wondered if she had been too harsh with him. After all, it was not very much he asked her to do, and they did pay her so little at the pharmacle. And then, perhaps her lover was poor, and needed the atticles he had asked her to get. Perhaps he was ill, and had said nothing. There was a touch on her shoulder. She There was a touch on her shoulder. She looked round. Jean was beside her, but the frown had not yet disappeared from his brow.

"Give me that paper," he said, abruptly. She unclosed her hand, and he picked the paper from it, and was turning away.

"Stop!" she said; "I will get you what you want, but I will myself put the money in the till for what they cost."

He stood there, looking at her for a moment, and then said:

"Lurine, I think you are a little fool. They owe you ever so much more than that. However, I must have the things," and he gave her back the paper with the and he gave her back the paper with the "Be sure you let no one see that, and be very certain that you get the right things." He walked with her as far as the corner of Rue de Lille. "You are not angry with me?" he asked her before they careful

"I would do anything for you," she whispered, and then he kissed her good-night. night:
She got the chemicals when the proprietor was out, and tied them up neatly, as was her habit, afterwards concealing them in the little basket in which she carried her lunch. The proprietor was a sharpeyed old lynx, who looked well after his shop and his pretty little assistant.
"Who has been getting so much chlorate of potash?" he asked, taking down the jar, and looking sharply at her.
The girl trembled. The girl trembled

"It is all right," she said. "Here is the money in the till." "Of course," he said. 'I did not expect you to give it away for nothing. Who bought it?" "An old man." replied the girl, trembling still, but the proprietor did not notice that—he was counting the money, and found it right. "I was wondering what he wanted with so much of it. If he comes in again look sharply at him, and be able to describe him to me. It seems suspicioty." Why it seem-ed suspicious Lurine did not know, but "Not here, not here," he replied hurriedly, and then ask anxiously, "Did anyone see you take them?"

"No, but the proprietor knows of the large package, for he counted the money."

"What money?" asked Jean.

"Why, the money for the things. You don't think I was going to steal them, did The young man laughed, and drew her nto a quiet corner of the gardens of the the Rue de Lille to night," he said.

"But you will come as usual to-morrow night?" she asked, anxiously.
"Certainly, certainly," he replied, as he rapidly concealed the packages in his The next night the girl waited patiently for her lover at the corner where they were in the habit of meeting, but he did not come. At last she saw a man ranning rapidly down the street, and as he passed a brilliantly-lighted window she rec-ognized Jean. He came quickly towards,

"Yes," said the other, "but we have enough on our hands now, if the crowd finds out who he is."

Lurine thought of following them, but she was so stunned by the words that her lover had said to he, without then, but the lover had said to he, without then, but the lover had said to he, without then, but the lover had said to he, without then, but the lover had said to he, without then, but the lover had said to he, without then, but the lover had said to he, without then he will watered, besides about 100.

The next morning she did not go through the gardens, as usual, to her work, and when she entered the Pharmacie de Siam, the proprietor cried out, "Here she is, the vixen! Who would have thought it of her? You wretch, you stole my drugs to give to that villain!"

"I did not," said Lurine, stoutly, "I put the money in the till for them."

"Hear her! She confesses!" said the proprietor. proprietor.

The two concealed officers stepped forward and arrested her where she stood as the accomplice of Jean Duret, who, the night before, had flung a bomb in the crowded Avenue de l'Opera. night before, had flung a bomb in the crowded Avenue de l'Opera.

Even the prejudiced French judges soon saw that the girl was innocent of all evil intent, and was but the victim of the scoundrel who passed by the name of Jean Duret. He was sentenced for life; she was set free. He had tried to place the blame on her, like the craven he was, to shield another woman. This was what cut Lurine to the heart. She might have tried to find an excuse for his crime, but she realized that he had never cared for her, and but used her as his tool to get possession of the chemicals he dared not buy.

In the drizzling rain she walked away from her prison, penniless, and broken in body and spirit. She passed the little

"Then may I walk with you to your home?" he asked.

"You may walk with me as far as the corner of the Rue de Lille," she replied.

"Thank you!" said the young fellow, and together they walked the short distance, and there he bade her good-night, afterwaking permission to meet her at the corner of the Rue St. Houore, and walk home with her the next night.

"You must not come to the shop," she said.

"I understand," he replied, nodding his head in assent to her wishes. He told her his name was Jean Duret, and by-and by she called him Jean, and he called her status of a moment as forgot the said.

"I understand," he replied, nodding his head in assent to her wishes. He told her his name was Jean Duret, and by-and by she called him Jean, and he called her the rain of her own life. She saw that the smiling face was but a ma k, held in place by the curving of the left arm over it. Life, she realized now, was made up of tragedy and comedy, and he who sees but the smiling face, sees but the half of life. "But," said the girl in horror, "that would be stealing."

The young man laughed.

"How much do they pay you there?" he asked. And when she told him, he laughed again, and said:

Summer Complaint of Infants. All these and many other complaints cured by this wonderful Nervine Tonic.

NERVOUS DISEASES.

As a cure for every class of Nervous Diseases, no remedy has been able to compare with the Nervine Tonic, which is very pleasant and harmless in all its effects upon the youngest child or the oldest and most delicate individual. Nine-tenths of all the ailments to which the human family is heir are dependent on nervous exhaustion and impaired digestion. When there is an insufficient supply of nerve food in the blood, a general state of debility of the brain, spinal marrow, and nerves is the result. Starved nerves, like starved muscles, become starved when the right kind of food is supplied; and a thousand weaknesses and ailments disappear as the nerves recover. As the nervous system must supply all the power by which the vital forces of the body are carried on, it is the first to suffer for want of perfect nutrition. Ordinary food does not contain a sufficient quantity of the kind of nutriment necessary to repair the wear our present mode of living and labor imposes upon the nerves. For this reason it becomes necessary that a nerve food be supplied. This South American Nervine has been found by analysis to contain the essential elements out of which nerve tissue is formed. This accounts for its universal adaptability to the cure of all forms of nervous de-

Tangement.

J. A. Hardel Extrasa, Montgomery Co. A SWORN CURE FOR ST. VITAS' DANCE OR CHOREA. CRAWFORDSVILLE, IND., June 22, 1887.

My daughter, eleven years old, was severely a ticted with St. Vitus' Dance or Chorea. We gave her three and one-half botuses of South American Nervine and she is completely restored. I believe it will cure every case of St. Vitus' Dance. I have kept it in my family for two years, and am sure t is the greatest remedy in the world for Indigestion and Dyspepsia, and for all forms of Nervous Disorders and Failing Health, from whatever cause.

Hariff E. Hall., of Waynetown, Ind., says:
"I owe my life to the Great South American Nervine. I had been in bed for five months from the effects of an exhausted stomach, Indigestin, Nervous Prostration, and a general shattered condition of my whole system. Had given up all hopes of getting well. Had tried three doctors, with no relief. The first bottle of the Nervine Tonic My system was completely shattered, appetite gone, was coughing and spitting
