

Hundreds Struggle and Fight for Berries at Indiantown.

Lively Scenes on Steamer Crystal Stream—There Were so Many Buyers That the Price Went Up.

There was something doing at Indiantown yesterday. Statements which appeared in the newspapers to the effect that large quantities of berries were expected and that the price would probably be low had the effect of attracting such a crowd to the wharves that what really happened was exactly the opposite of what was anticipated. So many buyers were there that there were a dozen people for every crate of berries brought down, and the result of such a demand was that the price went up.

A lot of berries came down, scores of teams went away from the boats loaded down with fruit, but fully a thousand people failed to secure the supply they were looking for. The prevailing price was six cents at first, but this soon went to seven, and even at this there was no over-supply. One man who came down river with eighteen crates sold them at five cents a box almost before the boat touched the wharf, and his eyes stuck out when a few minutes later he saw those same berries going off at seven cents. He lost the chance of making at least ten dollars by selling too soon, and for hours he wandered disconsolately about the wharves trying to get that money back.

There must have been a crowd of between five and six hundred people, men, women and children, waiting when the Crystal Stream arrived. This steamer was so full of freight that

Cure For The Blues

ONE MEDICINE THAT HAS NEVER FAILED

Health Fully Restored and the Joy of Life Regained

When a cheerful, brave, light-hearted woman is suddenly plunged into that perfect misery, the BLUES, it is a sad picture. It is usually this way: She has been feeling "out of sorts" for some time; head has ached and back also; she slept poorly, been quite nervous, and nearly fainted once or twice; head dizzy, and heart-beats very fast; then that bearing-down feeling, and during her menstrual period she is exceedingly depressed. Nothing pleases her. Her doctor says: "Cheer up; you have dyspepsia; you will be all right soon."

But she doesn't get "all right," and hope vanishes; then come the brooding, morbid, melancholy, everlasting BLUES.

Don't wait until your sufferings have driven you to despair, with your nerves all shattered and your courage gone, but take Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. See what it did for Madame Josephine Riville, Mass., Que. She writes:

"I suffered for years with female troubles—inflammation of the stomach and fallopian tubes which caused me violent pain and often vomit, so much so that I could not walk at times and attend to my daily duties. Life was misery to me. I was so blue and depressed that I nearly knew what to turn to for relief. I had tried the doctor but he did not help me. I was advised to try Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, so I bought a bottle. I am glad that I did so for I am well and strong to-day and the world looks bright for I have perfect health, thanks to your medicine."

If you have some derangement of the female organism write Mrs. Pinkham, Lynn, Mass., for advice.

family circle. He has little time for social enjoyments. For many months every year the lights in the auditor's department in the Eastern Block at Ottawa burn far into the night. Other departments of the government may have shone in many hours. Not so the auditor general's, which always has vast arrears of work to undertake.

SIR JOHN AND THE AUDITOR.

As a rule, Mr. Macdougall says little about his business outside of what he is required to state in his official capacity. But sometimes he unbends. Two or three years ago he told the Canadian Club in Toronto how, liberal though he was, he had been backed by Sir John Macdonald in the discharge of his duties. Soon after the conservative came into office he had occasion to object to certain proposed payments. "I went," says Mr. Macdougall, "to Sir John to get his aid in preventing some expenditure. I said: 'Sir John, this would do the government any good.' 'No, no, you are quite right,' said he. 'It would only give rascally gits like you a ground to run up and down the concessions abusing my name. You can always count upon my helping you. Be sure to call upon me when anything like that occurs.'"

On another occasion Mr. Macdougall asked Sir John for two extra chief clerks. "Be answered," says the auditor, "withal says moments ago: 'I have a reputation for economy. You know that you have always my support. Why do you come to me? Go to Foster and the rest.'"

A few days later I had reason to see Mr. Foster, and after my explanation he would usually add: 'Ah, that isn't quite as I heard it. Perhaps you aren't very far wrong. I knew that in nearly all of the cases he has his own explanation in council.' The auditor general, though a liberal in his early days, is not a politician, and is careful to refrain from saying anything political. Yet a few months ago he said of Sir Mackenzie Bowell: "I cannot restrain the tendency to acknowledge my obligations to this straightforward politician whenever his name is mentioned in my hearing. He seems to have the instinct of a man who has the best side whenever money is involved."

UNDER SIR MACKENZIE BOWELL.

Another good friend of the auditor-general is Sir Mackenzie Bowell. Of relations to that gentleman Mr. Macdougall says moments ago: "I have practiced of his when on his way to the council chamber to call at my office and say quite abruptly: 'What the devil are you doing now?' 'About my resignation,' I answered. 'After my explanation he would usually add: 'Ah, that isn't quite as I heard it. Perhaps you aren't very far wrong. I knew that in nearly all of the cases he has his own explanation in council.'"

THE ESCAPE.

Howard Eckstein, of the Greylock Hotel, Williamstown, tells a story of a woman stopping in Williamstown last summer who was deathly afraid of cats. Before entering a drug store she carefully inquired of the soda water boy whether any cats were in the store or not.

"No, no," replied the boy, "there ain't none. But one bit a lady here last week."

"But," exclaimed the good woman, "did they castrate it?"

"No," replied the boy, "they never do."

FATALITY NEAR NEW GLASGOW.

NEW GLASGOW, July 11.—A sad fatality occurred at McLeellan's Brook, on Saturday, when a young man, James McLeellan, a young farmer, fell from a horse and was killed. He was riding a horse named "Clyde" and was returning from a neighbor's house. The horse was galloping and struck a tree, throwing the rider. The man was killed instantly. The horse was taken to the slaughterhouse.

INGENIOUS.

A story comes from Paris of the unusual way in which a prominent young Parisian made the acquaintance of the stage beauty of the hour. The lady was lunching in a fashionable restaurant in the Bois de Boulogne, accompanied by her equally well known cousin, who was a graduate of one of the schools that made a specialty of metal working.

The worker in the yielding metal finds great delight in her materials. She has a long list of fascinating jewels to choose from, and a variety of coloring in her gold and silver and copper, which she may also harden to the points of sharpness or manipulate into soft and sensuous lines as her fancy dictates.

She has the power to make her own designs, cut her own gems into any shape she wishes, and as everything she makes passes through her hands and hers alone, she may impress upon it her individuality to such an expression of her conception of beauty of form and color.

TOO OUTSPOKEN.

An English prisoner, on being put into the dock in a London court, leaned over the front of the box and handed a "doek guinea" to a young member of the bar.

"You defended me once before, sir, do you remember? And got me off. It was at Hertford sessions, sir, for stealing a watch."

"For the alleged stealing of a watch, you mean?" corrected the barrister, as he pocketed his fee.

"Alleged be blowed!" replied the prisoner promptly. "I've got the watch at 'ome now!"

DIDN'T UNDERSTAND.

It might be supposed that English speaking people would not venture to travel in a foreign country without some knowledge of its language; but our countrymen do so every year.

A lady relates that she was one of a party of English tourists that visited Madrid. She was the only one of the number who knew any Spanish, and her stock was confined to "yes" and "no" and "mi nombre" is my name. By means of gestures they managed to see along the first afternoon and night.

The next morning at breakfast there was coffee, but no milk, and the party appealed to the lady to get some.

"To her dismay she ferreted the word for milk, and after striving in vain to recall it she seized a piece of paper and pencil and drew the picture of a cow.

The waiter examined the drawing critically, went out of the room and returned promptly with a bundle of tickets for that day's bull fight.

ONE OF THE POETS.
(M. A. P.)

The exquisite, though unconscious, humor of this letter addressed to the editor of the London Daily Mail will not be lost on the enlightened:

"Looking over some back issues of my Daily Mail, which have been kept for me during my absence from home, I see that Marriott Watson seems to imply that poetry, extolled by its triumph in the earlier part of last century, is now either dying or dead. As one who has been a life-long lover of poetry, and who has recently ventured to publish a volume of 'Lakeland Poems and Others,' will you, sir, kindly grant me space to assure the great host of your readers that poetry can never die, because it lives and moves too near the heart of things.

WOMEN MAKE JEWELRY.

Nowadays the ambitious woman who can earn her own money and enter the field of labor as a worker in applied arts. She finds in some of the many opportunities offered in arts and crafts work more remunerative than in other callings to the average woman.

Within the last few years so marked has been the progress of women in the making of jewelry that many women who began to work along other lines are confining themselves to it exclusively.

Among people of taste there is a constantly growing demand for beautiful and ornamental unusual and beautiful in conception and workmanship. More and more jewelry is becoming something besides a mere combination of gems and metals. Originality, taste and individuality characterize the finished product.

The materials used and the tools necessary to the fashioning of handmade jewelry are almost as interesting as the jewelry itself. Many of the finer tools are made by the worker herself.

The method employed in making a piece of jewelry is different from that of handling metals for other purposes. First of all the design is drawn on a very small article of design is roughly sketched several times larger.

The design is then copied in soft Cuban Wax. From this design the worker makes the piece of jewelry, which is then finished, but in the case of a very small article the design is roughly sketched several times larger.

If for a moderately large object it is drawn the exact size that it will be finished, but in the case of a very small article the design is roughly sketched several times larger.

The metals are always of fine quality, the gold never being less than 18 carat, the silver .925 pure. The copper is frequently used, by processes known to the individual worker alone, and by her made to match in shade the stones to be used in conjunction with it.

It is fascinating to watch a clever crafts-woman at work upon a piece of jewelry. Take, for instance, a silver and jade necklace made by a graduate of one of the schools that made a specialty of metal working.

The worker in the yielding metal finds great delight in her materials. She has a long list of fascinating jewels to choose from, and a variety of coloring in her gold and silver and copper, which she may also harden to the points of sharpness or manipulate into soft and sensuous lines as her fancy dictates.

She has the power to make her own designs, cut her own gems into any shape she wishes, and as everything she makes passes through her hands and hers alone, she may impress upon it her individuality to such an expression of her conception of beauty of form and color.

BOTH SAW THE MONKEY.
(N. Y. Tribune.)

"I had a most terrible experience today," declared the pretty girl to her boarding house companions. "I was walking along the street, when suddenly I saw a most peculiar monkey. I looked up, and there on a stand stood a most hideous monkey, leering at me. It startled me, and I stepped back quickly, putting my hand to my eyes. Then the monkey, who was coming just behind me remarked: 'You are behind me. You're all right, little girl. I see it, too, and I've been on the water cart for weeks.' Now, what do you suppose he meant?"

CIVIL LIST AND PALACES LOST BY KING OSCAR.

Royal Residences at Christiania of Modest Character, While Income Was $126,200.

When the Norwegian Storting, by a simple decree, declared the union with Sweden dissolved and that the rights of the two countries had ceased to act as King of Norway, the material loss of King Oscar and the royal family of the Bernadottes was not so great as might seem at the first blush. The union has been more nominal than real and the golden link of the crown has never been particularly solid. King Oscar has, indeed, at one stroke lost nearly half of his subjects and considerably more than one-third of his territory, but in Norway the monarchy has never drawn from the state revenues an excessive income. King Oscar has never encouraged a lavish expenditure in the management of his court, and a modest civil list, supplemented by a moderate private fortune, has sufficed for the needs of the royal family, which has in many respects formed habits of democratic simplicity.

The civil list of King Oscar as King of Sweden amounted to $249,000, and the royal family enjoys also an annuity of about $2,000, voted to King Carl XIV. and his successors on the throne of Sweden. Norway allowed the monarch a civil list of $249,000, and has granted by Sweden, about $126,200, on which to maintain the royal dignity.

By law King Oscar was bound to pass six weeks annually in Norway. Until recently—and it must be remembered he is in his seventy-seventh year—he attended every year the opening of the Norwegian Storting, and on his visits to Norway resided in one of the other of the royal residences at Christiania, the Royal Palace and his country seat, Oscarsholm.

The Royal Palace, situated on an eminence in the western part of the city, was built in 1822-1848, and with the gardens did not cost more than $120,000, voted by the Storting. The private apartments contain paintings and sculptures by Norwegian artists, most of whom were presented to the king and queen on their silver wedding, in 1832. The throne room contains portraits of Oscar I. and Queen Josephine, besides other members of the royal family.

The second royal residence ("Oscar's Hall") makes a favorite excursion for visitors to Christiania, as it is beautifully situated on the Christiania Fjord, two miles from the city. It was built in 1847 by King Oscar I. in Anglo-Gothic style. It was sold by Charles XV. to the government, but was set apart for the use of the reigning monarch. The park work and workmanship represented by some of his characteristic pictures of Norwegian peasant life. In the grounds are to be seen antique Norwegian buildings, an old Norwegian church, dating from the twelfth century and typical farmhouses of the country.

JUDGE FORBES' SENTENCE AROUSES COMMENT.

The sentence passed by Judge Forbes on the man Jackson, guilty of stealing, has aroused a lot of comment about the city, and different views are held. There are some who praise Judge Forbes for his effort towards ridding Canada of a criminal, and these persons express the wish that more Canadian judges would follow his example. They think it might be a lesson to some people in England that Canada is not to be made a dumping ground for all classes and conditions. Others take a very different stand and argue that the sentence should not have contained the option. They reason that the crime was committed in Canada and the criminal should have been punished in Canada. One legal gentleman speaking to the Sun thought that the judge in England who gave the prisoner before him the option of coming to Canada, had gone beyond his power, and that the same might apply in all cases.

Fries of Norton have come to respect him for his business ability and absolute honesty. Therefore his selection was deemed a happy one. That even in those early days there was need for such an office and such an auditor is proved by Mr. Macdougall's famous letter in which he says: "Friends expect to be benefited by offices they are unfit for, by contracts they are not entitled to, by advances not earned. Enemies ally themselves with friends and push the friends to the front. Some attempt to storm the office. Some dig trenches at a distance and approach in regular siege form. I feel like the besieged, lying on my arms night and day."

FIGHT HAS ENDED. And John Lorne Macdougall Has Quit.

His Struggle Against Graft and Thieving at Ottawa Was Long and Bitter.

(Mail and Empire.)

John Lorne Macdougall's long and bitter fight against graft and thieving at Ottawa is about ended, and the auditor general will vanish into private life. It is a matter for regret that this distinguished servant of the people, after half a lifetime spent in guarding their interests, should be virtually forced out of office by a dishonest political clique.

AN APPOINTMENT OF MACKENZIE'S.

His office was designed by Edward Blake, and the appointment of Mr. Macdougall to the newly-created office was made by Mr. Mackenzie shortly before the defeat of the liberal administration. The theory was that there should be some independent audit of the government's accounts apart from the government's audit, and therefore the auditor general was so securely fastened in office that he could be removed only by the vote of parliament. This also is a mere theory, for liberal politicians in which he found another way, just as sure and much easier. Mr. Macdougall, before his appointment, sat in parliament as a liberal representative of South Renfrew, and both sides of the house had come to respect him for his business ability and absolute honesty. Therefore his selection was deemed a happy one. That even in those early days there was need for such an office and such an auditor is proved by Mr. Macdougall's famous letter in which he says: "Friends expect to be benefited by offices they are unfit for, by contracts they are not entitled to, by advances not earned. Enemies ally themselves with friends and push the friends to the front. Some attempt to storm the office. Some dig trenches at a distance and approach in regular siege form. I feel like the besieged, lying on my arms night and day."
