Christmas Face Beginning to Shed Gloom on Streets--English Painter's Work Captivates Religious New England--Many Women Survey Election Returns--Musical Books from Vatican

Boston, Nov. 12.—Boston, bibulous or otherwise, seeing crimson, green or blue, according to its individual leaning, and with the political dog out of the system, one hears little else but talk of tickets for the great games, interspersed with speculations as to Yale's coming back. Bets are being laid by sober-minded citizens who heretofore never took the slightest interest in the football results. The girls are wearing the smalls that went come of whenever a young man appears who is likely to have a little extra ticket in his pocket, and the university graduate has attained a height of importance and distinction to which his wildest dreams had aspired. The only trouble is that there are too many of him to suit the undergraduates and not enough of him to suit his friends.

It was notable during the flashing of the election returns in Newspaper Row that hundreds of women were in the densely packed throng and evinced as much enthusiasm in the results of the voting as did the men. Women are evidently doing more than wave yellow banners and talk.

The Christmas face is seen on every downtown street nowadays and, in the words of Jennie Allen, "it's more than the bicycle face or the motor face. It's the worst face there is." The stores are filled with gorgeous displays of gifts reasonable and otherwise, and as the crowds increase every day one hears the same old cry of regret that the Christmas gifts were not decided on and purchased weeks ago. It seems to be a lesson that is never learned.

A New England public, of the kind that does not necessarily care so much for the current art of the age, based on Parisian technique and in disregard of subject, are enjoying a treat in the words of the famous English painter, Thomas E. Mosley, who though he has attained an enviable reputation throughout England and the continent is, like many estimable British artists, not so well known on this side of the Atlantic. Mr. Mosley's much discussed masterpiece, "The Temptation, or Christ in the Wilderness," has held many a visitor from the hinterland fascinated on entering the darkened ante-room of Copley Hall where this work is hung in impressive solitude. The solemnity of the work is felt from the first, while its dignity and simplicity accentuate the depth of thought and imaginative power of the artist. Preachers say that rarely have Bostonians seen a religious painting which embodies a more noble conception and that imaginative power is the keynote of much of Mr. Mosley's more recent work. In his visionary landscapes at all events, are found a departure from the hide-bound conventions of British art. The more grey-blue mystery of "The Wood beyond the World," the city of dreams growing out of the white rolling clouds far out over a hazy sea, in "Atlantis," the deep purples and high lights softened by a filmy veil in "The Prayer," the remarkable work entitled "The Cardinal"—these are only a few of the
