Candidate for Parliament at the Point of Death.

(Special Telegram to the Tribune.)

OTTAWA, Jan. 24.

J. B. Lewis, one of the Ottawa candidates for the Commons, who has been for some time lying in bed, has been the oldest citizen having been a member of the first City Council. He was Mayor when the city was called Bytown and has held the same office several times since.

MR. PALMER'S SPEECH.

Mr. Palmer, on coming forward to support the Government, was greeted with a cheer, and he said that he was not in politics, but in the Government. He had long been identified with the reform party, and he had not otherwise, he sought a seat in Parliament. He then made a lengthy explanation of the various reasons which had induced him to come out as a candidate. He had always held and he held to-day that a newspaper man loses his standing as a leader of public opinion when he becomes a politician, and his paper loses its character and prestige. As a proof, look at what a miserable sheet the Globe had been for the past few days. (Laughter.) He was not a late hour, it had been said, but he had considered his duty; as representing the great reform party, he had no choice but to support the Government, at least in all their good measures. The time for putting forward the sectional interests of the country to be arranged against each other. It was a Government which would be ruled entirely by such ideas. A great deal had been said in the House of Commons, and he had thought that he had done his duty as a patriot, and he had done so in a thorough manner. He had done so in a thorough manner. He had done so in a thorough manner. He had done so in a thorough manner.
