"It is worth at least thirty cents," Anna Harding assured her; and reluctantly Miss Mattie submitted.

"And the glass and china," said Anna Harding. "Would you think three dollars for the lot—?"

"Oh yes!" said Miss Mattie. "I don't know, after all," said Anna Harding, "whether I can resist this dear, diamond-paned press. I could sell the one I have, and—What would you take for it, Miss Mattie?"

Something like a scale of values was beginning to formulate in Miss Mattie's mind; the excitement of the traffic to take hold upon her.

"Is it worth, do you suppose," she ventured, "two dollars?"

"Perhaps it is," Anna Harding said. "But I am not sure, after all, that I want— It is certainly worth a dollar and a half. If you care to sell it for that—"

"It's a-plenty!" said Miss Mattie, eagerly.

"This," said Miss Mattie, "is my room. I don't reckon there is anything you want—"

Anna Harding took it in with a glance.

"The bureau is a darling, with that little swinging glass and those cute little drawers under it, but I don't particularly care—nor for the bed. I do want a wardrobe, though; and there doesn't seem to be any—"

"There's a closet I hang my other dress in," Miss Mattie said, "but there's a wardrobe in brother's room."

She crossed the passage.

"This," she said, laying a reverent hand upon the small knob of the door, "was his room."

She paused upon the threshold as upon that of a shrine. But Anna Harding did not pause.

"A tester-bed," she said, "with carved posts!—the very thing of all others that I wanted! What will you take—"

Miss Mattie shrank as from a blow. She squeezed her thin hands together, and the tears rained from her eyes.

"It's the bed he died in!" she said. "I couldn't—"

"But, my dear Mattie," said Anna Harding, "how in the world will you travel around with a four-post bed? And you will be moving about from place to place, won't you, all the time?"

"I'm going to visit around in the neighborhood a little while, till I can decide what to do," Miss Mattie said, absently. She thought distractedly a few minutes. "I don't mean to be unaccommodating," she said, anxiously. "But I couldn't sell it. I couldn't sell it to save my life. But 'twouldn't be the same thing to give it. I'd be too glad for you to take it off my hands—just so—without giving me anything for it—"

"You dear thing!" said Anna Harding.

"It's so lucky you came in the wagon," Miss Mattie said. "I suppose the carriage is broken?"

"Oh, no," said the other carelessly, "but the wagon is nearly as comfortable as that antediluvian carriage of ours (country carriages are such marvellous things, aren't they?) and it holds so much more. It positively breaks my heart to leave anything behind, but I'll send over for the rest in the morning."

Tumbled, dusty, radiant, she stood on the porch making her adieux, in one hand a pair of painted bellows, in the other a tarnished ormolu screen, which, with other things, including a lacquered wine-cooler, a set of mahogany bed-steps, and an inlaid kidney desk lacking one roller, she had rummaged from the garret, to her own delight and Miss Mattie's further enrichment by a dollar and seventy-five cents.

"But can't you stay to dinner?" Miss Mattie said. Her tone was almost pleading, so imperative the impulse to stave off a little longer the waiting loneliness.

But Anna Harding kissed her, resisting the invitation.

"And thank you so much," she said, "for the bed. It is a perfect darling! And you were the loveliest thing to give it to me!"

Miss Mattie's eyes filled and overflowed.

"Oh, no!" she said. "I hadn't any place—"

She lingered upon the steps even after the road dwindled to the horizon empty, and under all the blue vastness there was no sign of life but the nearby shrilling of summer insects in the rank grass.

"I hadn't any place for it," she said aloud, as if arraigned before the bar of silence. An intolerable reproach was in the air, in the strident voices rising from the ground, most of all in the sombreness of the ravished house, upon which she turned her back, temporizing.

"I hadn't any place for it," she said, "or anything. I don't know where I'll be or what I'll do—"

Appalled, she faced the strangeness of the thought—then rose to meet it.

"But I've got friends!" she said. "Just think of Anna Harding's coming!"—[Annie Steger Winston, in Harper's Bazar.

THE BEST LINIMENT IN THE MARKET.

Calgary, Canada, July 26, 1905. The Lawrence-Williams Co., Cleveland, O.

The West, as you no doubt know, is a great horse country, and we have a large sale of Gombault's Caustic Balsam. We believe you have the best liniment on the market, and, although the sale in this country is large, it could be greatly increased by a little advertising.
