MASS IN CAMP.

The Holy Sacrifice Offered Up With Military Honors,

RIGHT REV. BISHOP IRELAND, CHAPLAIN OF THE NATIONAL GUARD OF MINNESOTA, PRESENT, AND ADDRESSES THE MILITIA.

[North Western Chronicle.]

In the general orders read at Camp Hubbard, on White Bear Lake, Minnesota, on Saturday morning, July 15, was the an-nouncement that "religious services will be held in camp at 10.30 a. m. to-morrow, by the chaplain of the National Guard of Minnesota, Rt. Rev. John Ireland." How many to-day live without religion! The existence of God is to them like an

Sunday morning the sky opened bright and clear over the waters of White Bear abstract mathematical truth, having no practical consequences for them. There Lake, on the lovely shores of which for is with them no worship, no prayer, no thought that His will is a law to them. the past week the several companies of the State Guard has been assembled for practice in the tactics of war. The ground Let us ask how this religious indifference accords with the principles to which I have selected for the camp, admirably adapted to the exigencies of military duties, was at the same time most beautiful and picturalluded. He then sketched out the duties of man to God, his creator and his supreme bene esque in its surroundings. It is a large factor-worship, praise, petition, obedi-ence -- and spoke of the necessity of relig-ion for civil society, religion being the moral power that gives dignity to aufield, in parallelogram-like form, or open one side skirting the Lake, on the others fringed by groves of shady trees. In the centre of the field the headquarters were moral power that gives againty to all thority, civil or military, in society, and being at the same time the sole power capable of repressing crime and cementing together the different classes, inferior and located, tents being pitched there for the commander and his staff. In front of these were the long line, several rows deep, tents of the infantry batdeep, tents of the infantry bat-talion, and on the right the guns and tents of the Emmett Light Artillery were visible. The chaplain's tent was, of superior, poor and rich. Religion, he concluded, imperiously demands the allegiance of every man. Am I wrong when I say, among soldiers more course, at headquarters, and there had the than among many gatherings of men, it should be honored and obeyed? Then be preparations for the religious service been made. Captain C. M. McCarthy, of the Artillery, was in charge, and to this gentleshould be honored and obeyed, hich be religious; respect and revere God's holy name; worship and love Him: seek out His laws and follow them. Deem it an honor and a glory to bow in prayer before Him; scorn the disloyal and dishonorman, as brave a soldier as he is a devoted Catholic, much honor is due for the ex-quisite taste and order with which all things had been placed in readiness. In this Marker a resident of the vil Him; scorn the disloyal and dishonor-able man who, in his ignorance and false Wm. able man who, in his ignorance and false pride, forgets his God. The sermon over-Rev. James McGol-rick began Mass, and all present, non-Catholics as well as Catholics, appeared to tent, the space immediately in front being neatly carpeted. The altar was decked in military style, United States flags encirclrealize that now the solemn moment in the services had been reached. As the Mass proceeded, the feeling of reverence and devotion became very visible, and in the most devout throng of worshipper ing it in graceful festoons, swords and bay-onets massed in bunches on both sides of the crucifix, bayonets serving as taper-holders. As a back-ground for the altar around Cathedral altars a grander or mor holders. As a back-ground for the altar were Irish and American flags, the Irish impressive scene would not be witnessed than was offered to view by this crowd of soldiers and civilians of all beliefs in religflag being gladly lent for the occasion by the Emmett Light Artillery. Again, the arm.y is the home and the school of patriotism. Love of country, warm and disinterested, is the soul of civil society. Without it no nation lives and prospers. Where will you learn patriotism more thoroughly than in the military camp, over which floats the stan-dard of the nation, for whose honor and glory it is your duty as soldiers to die? THE BODY OF ST. TERESA. What Catholics are there to whom this wondrous name is unfamiliar? Un-But speaking to you this blessed Sun day morning, as one of Christ's ministers, of those sacred principles of which the wondrous hame is unnaminary on-fortunately, however, though the gener-ality of us are well acquainted with the name, our knowledge extends but little further. Perhaps, then, the few following lines, besides exciting us to a somewhat more lively affection for this far-famed Saint may also serve as a little interesting army is a school, I have in view a high-er and yet nobler aim than to extol the National Guard of Minnesota, much as the Guard may deserve my praise. I recall these principles because on them is based the necessity for you of religion. Religion teaches man's relations to God, and enforces upon him observance of the duties which follow from these relations. Saint, may also serve as a little interesting instruction.

Alighting two days ago from the mail-oach at the entrance of Alba, I carefully coach at the entrance of Aria, I catering picked my way up the very narrow and very slushy street, which I was told led to the Square of St. Teresa. Sure enough I reached the square, but so small was it and so utterly deserted and silent that for the moment I imagined it to be the quadrangle of some monastery or palace. On the one side, it is true, were three faint the one sheet, it is true, where the three sides were wholly taken up by the Carmelite Monastery, the Carmelite Convent and the Carmelite Church. This latter I entered, feeling in the all-p ing stillness that now in very truth I was treading on holy ground. My surprise and wonder were not at all abated by the and wonder were not at all abated by the sights and sounds in the church it-self. Far away up near the sanctuary I perceived a solitary group of about a dozen women, whilst a priest celebrating High Mass was reading the Epistle. On looking behind me, I noticed the wall burg over with the numerous

"EX-VOTOS of unfortunate and grateful pilgrims. To my right and left, looking in the direction of the high altar, were various tombs of former local celebrities; whilst half way up, to my left, was a little chapel literally seeming to be scooped out of the earth. In this for a long time had reposed the ody of St. Teresa; and it was from the identical grating which even now shuts off the cloister from this chapel that the Saint often assisted at the Holy Sacrifice. In fact, not only is this chapel exactly as it was in the days of the Saint who in her illness was wont to spend hours looking through the bars and holding, we may be assured, very sweet commune with our Lord in the Holy Eucharist. Next I directed my gaze to the high altar and railed off from the sanctuary, but distinctly visible to all who might enter the church, was the Markle Sancourlagits

THE MARBLE SARCOPHAG THE MABLE SARCOTHAGUS in which reposes the body of the Saint. The Mass being finished, I approached and examined everything more closely. The sarcophagus was indeed a most elaborate and curious production of art, scenes from the life of the Saint being represented standing out in relief and depicted in a most vivid manner. The Saint's body is enclosed in three coffins, the keys of which are respectively held by the General of the Order, the Mother Superior, and the Bishop of the diocese. The coffins have been, I believe, but once opened since they received their sacred contents, and as there is a very widespread rumor that they are again to be opened in October of this year, the the half of you."

carefully examined by thousands of visi-tors. Just as they have furnished in the years gone by a fruitful theme for com-ment and surmise, so likewise at the pres-ent day. None have as yet been able to explain away the circumstances as merely natural, though in truth there have not been wanting many who have tried to do so, and would gladly have seen their efforts crowned with success. Your valuable space forbids me entering more into detail on what I saw, much less does it admit of my describing the feelings naturally awakened in a Catholia by the sight of

of Catholic Spain. Just one word more. As I held the letter written by the very hand of St. Teress, and piously preserved in the con-vent, a Jesuit Father who stood at my side called my attention to the signature of the Saint. "You see," said he, "that the discussion going on in Germany and elsewhere as to whether St. Teresa spelled her name' 'Theresa,' or 'Teresa,' would rapidly come to an end if the learned ones rould take the trouble to visit this place. Clear, distinct, neat, and well done, stands out boldly at the foot of the letter the signature, 'Teresa de Jesus,' "-J. Mahoney, in the Catholic Times.

Many persons may be interested in a version of that strange tale known as the "Beresford Ghost Story," dear to all lovers of the supernatural, which is here given. It is warranted as correct on no less an authority than the present Archbishop of Armagh, who, as a great-great grandson of one of the principal actors and collater-ally descended from the other, certainly ourcht to know all about it, if any one the military were throngs of civilians from the neighboring village and from St. Paul, the neighboring village and from St. Paul, men and women, Protestants and Catho-lics, all attracted by the novel sight of a Mass in camp, and all showing by their reverent demeanor that they had fully caught the spirit of the occasion. The beautiful altar, the bright uniforms of the effect the wight design balance in the beautiful altar, the bright uniforms of the officers, the richly-dressed ladies, in the open air upon the broad prairie, under Minnesota's beautiful sky, the white tents in view and farther on the dark woods and ally descended from the other, certainly ought to know all about it, if any one does. Nichola Sophia Hamilton, who afterward became Lady Beresford, had made an agreement with the Earl of Tyrone of the De la Poer family, with the placid waters of the lake, all went to make up a picture of exquisite beauty sel-dom to be seen, and which will long be rewhom she had been brought up, that whichever of them died first was to whichever of them died first was to appear to the other if there was any truth

She retired to her room, sent for her son Sir Marcus, for her motion, compet their attention. To the more thoughtful among us a profound and far-reaching significance underlies the scene. The military camp puts be-fore us in positive actuality sacred princi-ples which enter closely into the construc-ion of true method, and which ere the daughter Lady Riverston, and, I believe, Henry, Archbishop of Dublin. She then told the story for the first time of Lord Tyrone appearing to her, telling her of his death, that she would have a son who would marry his brother's daughter, and pies which enter closely into the construc-tion of true manhood, and which are the pillars upholding civilized society. To the right of the altar is a massive door, seeming from a distance to be part of the ornamentation of the altar itself, but in reality shutting out from sight "one of Heaven's best treasures on earth," the heart and arm of St. Teresa, both in a heart and arm of St. Feresa, both in a state of perfect preservation. Just towards the top of the heart is a long and deep indentation resulting from a wound which the Saint herself says was inflicted by an angel whilst she was in one of her ecstasies. As St. Teresa mentioned the fact some time before her death, we cannot but surmise in it some strange mystery. But that which now inflames afresh the faith and love of Catholics, and causes much surprise and conjecture on the part of all, is the unaccountable appearance of FIVE THORNS GROWING OUT OF THE HEART

ITSELF. The three that first appeared are as long as an ordinary-sized finger, and about half the thickness of a common lead pencil. The other two which were first noticed in 1864, are much smaller, but quite visible. In fact, since the whole contents of the visible. In fact, since the whole contents of the urn may be viewed from a distance of about three inches, the thorns and the long incision in the heart attract one's attention immediately. There is no satisfactory explanation for the appearance of the thorns. The story, as told by the pious villagers of Alba, and very prevalent in Spain, is as follows: In the year 1834 it became known that the body of St. Teresa had been agitated in the coffins, loud knocks having been heard with the wondrous appearance of the thorns in the heart of the Saint, led man the to believe that something sad and disastrous was going to happen to Spain. Strangely was going to nappen to spain. Strangely enough, a few months afterwards the re-ligious orders were cruelly attacked, four-teen Jesuits being one day massacred in the streets of Madrid; then followed in the succeeding years a series of unprecedented misfortunes for Spain, as history attests.

However, I am bound to say that though the story seems plausible enough, it rests on no religious foundation. Not
