help until an individual reached the water. My boat was the last to leave the ship.

The Llandovery Castle began settling rapidly, first listing and then straightening herself as the bow began pointing skyward. We were within 40 feet as she settled, going down so gradually that we did not notice any suction. My last glimpse of the ship showed the bow sticking straight up out of the water like a giant wounded shark and going to her death without a struggle. This was before our experience aboard the ship.

The Germans sent us adrift into the darkness without a word of farewell, suggestion, direction or anything, but we were thankful to get away from them. The uncertainty of our position overcame thoughts of my own injury, but above all, I could not help wonder what had become of the others. After the submarine disappeared with a swish, all was stillness—a terrible stillness. There were no more cries for help heard.

"Then a long night. After 36 hours we were rescued by a British destroyer and here I am with every comfort and attention, but I cannot help but feel that if the Germans had not interfered, we possibly could have saved many of those poor souls in the water clinging to wreckage and crying for help that never came."

30,000 More Farmers

Must go to the Front

MOTION TO DEFEAT COMING OUT AGRICULTURE IS DEFEATED IN COMMONS

London, July 2.—W. F. Roch, member for Pembroke, in moving the adjournment of the House of Commons, drew attention to the agricultural laborers at the harvest. He said that he was inundated with letters from farmers bewailing the probable disastrous effects of the Government's action and threatening to turn their cattle into the harvest fields unless they got the needed labor. Mr. Roch stated that the agricultural committees were not willing parties when thirty thousand farmers were called up, and for which Sir Auckland Geddes was solely responsible.

R. E. Prothero, M.C.O., sympathized with the complaint voiced by the member for Pembroke, but emphasized the overmastering need for men for the army. Mr. Prothero was short all around, but he said that the Government had a portion of man-power for the army. Continuing, Mr. Prothero said:

"What they are asking the men to do on the land is nothing compared with what they are demanding of the men at the front. I admit that the farmers cannot spare men. I cannot say that the harvest will be saved, for all of these 30,000 men were killed and the Government has no right to demand that the men at the front should be spared. The men at the front are the backbone of the nation, and the Government has no right to demand that they should be spared."

Several of the members criticized the Government for sending men to the front after three months' training. Mr. Donat Law said that the men were being sent to the front after only three months' training, and that the Government was not doing enough to train the men.

THE ORANGE ORDER HANDED FINE LEMON

That the working of the M.S.A., which practically exempts Roman Catholic students when once they have entered a summary or judiciary, while Protestant divinity students are not exempted because they do not, like Catholics, receive any orders at so early a period of their training, is due to amendments made by the Orange members of Parliament is made clear by a reference to newspaper reports of July of last year. The Star of July 29, 1917, carried on its first page a special despatch from Ottawa pointing out the situation exactly. The headings of this report showed its tenor: "Borden Handed Fine Lemon to Orange Order." "And the Grange-men Accepted with Alacrity." "Joyous Event for Quebec." "Catholic Divinity Students Exempt." "And Protestants Do Not Enjoy the Favor—A Joker in Conscription Bill." There was not the least attempt to disguise the lemon, Sir Robert Borden, Hon. Mr. Doherty and Hon. Mr. McKeen all argued in favor of retaining the exemption for divinity students.

French Army Headquarters, July 1.—An important part was played in the battle on Friday last between the Alame and Villiers Collieries by new small tanks which were used for the first time and engaged a considerable force. They are almost a quarter the size and weight of the ordinary battle tank and carry a crew of two men, one of whom steers and the other operates the machine guns. The new tanks are much faster than the ordinary tanks and can climb a slope which the latter could not attempt, and can swing around in their tracks in a few seconds. Their small size and high speed naturally make them more difficult targets for the enemy's artillery than the heavy tanks.
