Their Life is No Joke.

Normandy and Brittany together are he land of legends and romance, but here is a noticeable difference in the cople. The Breton is stalwart in stature and stern and serious in disposition. He has hewed his life out amid he serious things and along the rocky oads. His bronzed face looks austere, ut beneath his blue blouse beats a heart carm and true. The primitive simplicity but beneath his blue blouse beats a heart warm and true. The primitive simplicity of his life and the intenseness of his religion gives the Breton short view of the frivolities of existence. He carries his religion into his daily life and work, and along all the roads are gaudy crici-fixes which the peasants never pass without kneeling and crossing them-selves.

It is characteristic of all these Brit-It is characteristic of all these Brittany folk that they mind their own business. I don't know what the result would be if you were to try a joke on them. I should be afraid to undertake it. Life is a serious problem to the Breton. It is homespun for him even though the rest of France may be arrayed in silks. He has worked out an existence against great odds, and it has given him a character and physique which makes him notable among his fellow-countrymen.—From "An Intimate Recursion," by Frank Presbery, in the Outing Magazine for February.

BEULAH SURVEY LOTS SELLING

Take a stroll over the survey and you will be convinced that we are offering superior value in "Beulah Lots," and you will also agree that we are justified in advancing the price $2 per foot May lst. A word or two about restrictions: The purchaser is not compelled to build, but should he desire to do so, then he must erect a dwelling with a cash valuation of at least $1,500. The wall of house next to street shall be 14 feet from street line, and 4 feet from northerly line of lot, this restriction giving a uniform building line on each street, also permitting lawns on south side of every house. Not more than one dwelling shall be built on each lot, thus ensuring sunshine and a healthy surrounding. We think these wholesome restrictions will appeal to "Home Builders" in preference to a "Lone Lot" with no restrictions.

there are crossings for the greatly daring. Behind the station proper is the freight station and sidings, some forty feet long. The stations, and, indeed, the whole system, are beautifully lighted with electric lamps fitted with reflectors. In all there are forty-eight of these soft, restful lights, and a specially tall one is established in the freight station in order to carry on work. These lamps are supplied from storage batteries placed under the track, and their capacity is enough to light up the whole room without bringing the gas into requisition. Electric lamps also light the signal cabins and posts along the line.

In one signal box are no less than twenty-six levers, from which stretch flexible wires to the signal posts. Of these last there are a round dozen, three or four feet high, and fully equipped with semaphores, and lamps showing red, green and white. Besides these, the signal cabins also work sixteen sets of points by means of real connections and levers. Every detail in the matter of Every detail in the matter of signalling and shunting has been thought out and executed with amazing accuracy, so as to heighten the effect of reality, which is the chief impression given by this extraordinary toy system. Two turntables are provided to take locomotives and tenders. These tables have four levers for the points, and are likewise fitted with spring buffers. As the train passes on its way it takes a long cutting of some forty feet and two feet in depth. The sides of this cutting are covered with grass, and on top of both sides a dwarf hedge is planted by way of scenic attraction.

Beyond the cutting the railroad is crossed by a bridge, and before reaching the second station, Beechvale, a long and somewhat dreadful looking tunnel has to be negotiated. Its actual length is eighteen feet. The locomotive with its tender is five feet long and eighteen inches high. It is a six-inch guage, exact duplicate of an express engine of the London & Northwestern Railroad. The only points in which it differs from its prototype are, first a smaller number.

inches high. It is a six-inch guage, exact duplicate of an express engine of the London & Northwestern Railroad. The only points in which if differs from its prototype are, first, a smaller number of tubes in the boiler; second, the model has no injector, and, third, steam is got up by a charcoal fire kept at great heat by a special blast. Engine and tender cost $1.800 and took nearly nine months to complete. Altogether this marvellous little system took upward of two years to build, of which period one-fourth was occupied in fitting up the huge room in which the train runs.

The speed of the engine on the straight is about six miles an hour, and, of course, considerably less on the curves at either end. These are twenty-six feet in diameter. Some difficulty was experienced by the contractors in getting these curves exactly right, as the six-inch gauge of the railroad introduced an entirely new problem in construction.
