

HASZARD'S GAZETTE, MARCH 9.

ith, although prepared in a view, it would seem, of saving its essential project, keeping within sufficient limits, might arise upon the opinion of the members of the House, elicited by all of which might be deemed of sufficient importance. The Bill distinctly read through by Mr. Fawcett Longworth Esq., and the Committee in operation suggesting alterations, and details of some parts of the measure however recommended by the Committee by whom it was submitted, and the operation of the Bill would, and the discussion was on or three questions, dip being, whether the Committee to be entrusted with the management of the works and improvements by the Nine and, whether he should be of the inhabitants to be meeting. On the question's it was carried by an overwhelming majority that such officer should be chosen by ballot (not being) as provided in the draft of two of much less importance in a similar manner taken on the adoption of the Committee, and it was carried by nearly the whole meeting having then, by expressed their thanks for Chairman dispersed, apparently with the manner in which it was carried.
